How's Business? By Don Blyly

As many of our older customers retire, they often move from a large old house with lots of space to store books to a smaller place with a lot less room for books, resulting in many bags or boxes of books being brought to the Uncles. This has been going on for many years, but we recently had the largest batch we've ever seen at Uncle Hugo's. A customer who was a regular for decades decided, back when cover prices were going from $.75 up to $.95, that he wanted to collect all the science fiction and fantasy paperbacks every published. He picked up every new paperback from our new release shelf for a couple of decades, plus looking for used copies of older books. About the time the cover prices started hitting $3.95, he started being more selective in his buying. After Scott Imes died in 2001, the customer stopped coming in and stopped collecting. Around the middle of July he stopped in, told me that he was 72 and had decided it was time to get rid of his collection. Over the next few weeks I bought almost 6000 used science fiction, fantasy, and horror paperbacks from him, along with a few hardcovers and trade paperbacks. There were a lot of rare books in there that I remember selling to him back in the 1970s, but there were a few that I don't remember ever having seen before. Several hundred of the books have already been snatched up by other customers, but we still have huge amounts of hard-to-find paperbacks clogging our aisles. Please stop by and buy some.

Over a year ago the KFC franchisee for the Twin Cities went bankrupt, and almost a year ago Popeye's bought 14 former KFC locations to turn into Popeye's Fried Chicken outlets. We've been hearing for many months that all of the former KFC locations would be remodeled and reopened by the end of July, but there's been little activity around the KFC location near Uncle Hugo's. Finally, around the middle of July a locked storage container about the size of a semi trailer was dropped in the parking lot near the back door of the building. The dentist located between the Uncles and the former KFC has been watching the site very carefully. He said that the only action he's seen on the site in the last couple of months was somebody with a weed whip. He asked the guy when the Popeye's would be open, and the guy claimed it would be open with 5 weeks. That was 4 weeks ago, and still nothing is happening on the site. Our long fried chicken famine continues.

As usual lots of stuff had to be cut from the paper newsletter, but the full version is available on the website.

Short Recommendations By Don Blyly

Kate Elliott's excellent Spiritwalker Trilogy is an alternate history fantasy that throws in almost everything but the kitchen sink, but still manages to work very well. The Romans failed to defeat Carthage, leaving the Phoenicians in control of the seas and a weaker Roman Empire on land. About 1000 years before the story begins (in the 1800s, dated from Augustus coming to power in Rome), the Roman Empire pretty much collapsed, but not before having a heavy impact on the cultures of western Europe. About 400 years before the story begins, the Persians conquered Northern Africa, causing many of the Phoenicians to flee to Europe and form alliances with the Celtic princes. About 100 years later, an outbreak of ghouls south of the Sahara destroyed the west African empire of Mali, with many of the Mali elite hiring Phoenician ships to take them, their gold, and their magic to Europe, where they married into the families of the Celtic princes. Some of the Mali hired Phoenicians to take them to South America and eventually to North America, where they met the “trolls”, intelligent descendants of the dinosaurs who are slightly more technologically advanced than the humans and very interested in trade with the humans (or “rats”, as they like to call the humans). And then there is the new Ice Age, which has lowered the sea level enough to connect England to France. And the cold mages are the most powerful of several different kinds of magic users. Throw in people (and others) passing back and forth between our world and the spirit world, plus the Wild Hunt, plus too many other things to mention, and you have a very interesting background for the story.

Cold Magic (#1, $7.99) features Catherine (“Cat”), an orphan approaching her 20th birthday, living with a Phoenician family of modest means that she believes to be her aunt and uncle and various cousins, including Beatrice (“Bee”), who is a couple of months younger and her best friend. When Cat is suddenly forced against her will to marry a cold mage, she starts to learn that much of what she thought she knew is wrong. Cat and Bee start out with a rather romantic view of life, which they are forced to alter by what they learn of cold mages, politics in Europa, and happenings in the spirit world. Cold Fire (#2, $7.99) primarily takes place in the Antilles Islands, where Cat and Bee and other characters have fled, and allows them and the reader to experience the society set up with the Mali refugees, the native population (with even stronger magic than either the Mali refugees or the Europeans), and the “trolls” from North America.

Cold Steel (#3, $18.00) primarily takes place in the spirit world and back in Europa, and does a wonderful job of tying up almost all of the loose ends. General Camjiata, who we met in the first book after he had failed in his first attempt to conquer Europa, has secured military backing (magical and mundane) in the Antilles, and has returned to Europa to try again. Cat and Bee are much more knowledgeable and formidable women in the third book than they were at the beginning of the series, and neither of them trust the General, but they are willing to help him to the extent that it will advance their own goals.

Back in 2006 a wonderful debut fantasy novel came out, The Lies of Locke Lamora ($7.99) by Scott Lynch, and it's been on our recommended fantasy shelf for many years. Set on a world that is clearly not Earth, in the city of Camorr (built by the alien Eldren and then abandoned perhaps 30,000 years ago and now filled with humans), this is the story of Locke Lamora. An orphan who began his life of crime at the age of six, he eventually comes to lead the best team of con men in the city, the Gentlemen Bastards. Part of the fun consists of the clever plots to remove wealth from the decadent nobles, but a large part of the fun are the clever lines that the Gentlemen Bastards fling at each other.

A year later, Red Seas Under Red Skies ($7.99) came out. To avoid revealing too much about the ending of Lies, let me just say that two of the Gentlemen Bastards, Locke and Jean, move on to another city to practice their cons on a fresh set of victims. While Red Seas was fun, it was not as outstanding as Lies, largely because Locke and Jean could not fling as many clever lines at each other as the whole team had been able to fling in the first book.

The next year (2008), the third book was supposed to come out, but was postponed. And postponed again. And postponed again. Finally, The Republic of Thieves ($28.00) will be released in October, and it is very good.

Since they were about six years old, Locke had a crush on Sabetha, the red-haired little girl who grew up to be the only Gentle(Lady) Bastard. At the beginning of the book, it's been over 5 years since he last saw her, but he's still obsessed with her. Much of The Republic of Thieves consists of scenes that happened in the past, showing earlier cons run by the Gentlemen Bastards that the reader has not previously seen. This allows the reader to learn that the relationship between Locke and Sabetha is more complicated than Locke would like to admit, but it also lets the reader watch the full team of Bastards flinging clever lines at each other.

But, the plot also moves forward. The bondsmagi rule the city of Karthian, but to keep the factions of magi from using their magic to kill members of other factions, they hold the forces that pursue them. A hero may yet arise).....	$7.99

Pratchett, Terry	The Color of Magic (Discworld # 1: Reissue; Imagine, if you will, a flat world sitting on the backs of four elephants who hurtle through space balanced on a giant turtle. And now, something hitherto unknown on the Discworld has arrived: a tourist! elections every five years under strict rules. One faction make Locke and Jean an offer they can't refuse to help rig the election in their favor, while another faction makes Sabetha an offer she can't refuse to rig the election in their favor, with warnings from both factions that any cooperation between these outside consultants will be dealt with lethally. Since Locke and Sabetha have always been fiercely competitive, this makes their complicated relationship even more complicated. But watching them each try to be more crooked than the other at rigging the election is a lot of fun.

Near the end of the book, one of the magi reveals some startling things about Locke's background (which may or may not be true) and gives him a prophecy about his future (which may or may not be true). Hints are dropped about why the Eldren fled the world. And other interesting developments at the end of the book make me look forward to the next installment—hopefully soon.

Robert J. Sawyer's Triggers ($7.99) is more a near future thriller than traditional science fiction. An experimental electronic device for dealing with post traumatic stress disorder is being used in a DC hospital when an electro-magnetic pulse from a terrorist device at the nearby White House causes the experimental device to do strange things to 20 people in the hospital, one of whom is the President, being operated on following an assassination attempt. Each of the 20 people can read the memories of another of the 20 people, which means one of them can read the memories of the President, and that person is concealing that he's reading the President. And each of the other people is having to cope with the fact that they are now reading the thoughts of a stranger, and some other stranger is reading them. A well-told, entertaining story results, as assorted possibilities of the concept are explored.

The Hammer and the Blade by Paul S. Kemp ($7.99) is a fun, fast-paced fantasy. Nix and Egil are a pair of tomb raiders who are very skilled and lucky at escaping ancient dangers, but not so good with current dangers. Nix is a sneak thief with a smart mouth, which keeps getting him into trouble. Egil is the only priest of a god that even he doesn't believe is around any more. After a particularly dangerous but lucrative tomb robbing adventure, they want to take it easy for a while, but are forced by an angry wizard to join an even more dangerous tomb robbing expedition. Lots of rollicking fun.

Sandman Slim by Richard Kadrey ($7.99, signed copies available) came out in 2009, and is constantly on our recommended fantasy shelf. James Stark was a troubled teen growing up in L.A., who fell in with a bad group of teens, all of whom could work magic. James was the strongest magic user, so the others ganged up on him and sent him to hell. After eleven years as a gladiator in hell, he escapes back to L.A., and he's looking for payback against the others. What follows is fast paced, profanity-laden violence, with lots of humor.

Next came Kill the Dead ($22.95 signed hc still available, or $12.99 trade pb), then Aloha From Hell ($12.99), and Devil Said Bang ($12.99). Each was fun, but each was a little less fun than the one before it. Kill City Blues ($24.99) just came out, and it's the best since the first.

Stark (aka Sandman Slim) has misplaced the Qomrama Om Ya, a weapon from the banished older gods, who are trying to come back into our universe (which would be a Very Bad Thing). Supposedly, a dead man in Kill City (an abandoned multi-story shopping mall in L.A. that's been taken over by all kinds supernatural forces that you wouldn't want to encounter) has information that Stark needs, so he leads a team into the Kill City maze.

Abaddon's Gate ($17.00) by James S. A. Corey is the third in the excellent space opera series that began with Leviathan Wakes ($15.99) and continued with Caliban's War ($15.99), and should only be read after reading the first two volumes.

The alien artifact that orbited Saturn for two billion years has now eaten much of Venus and then set up a gate on the edge of the solar system. Patricia Briggs has two related series, the Mercy Thompson series (featuring a shape-shifting VW mechanic, who was raised by werewolves although she is a were-coyote) and the Alpha and Omega series (featuring as main characters a couple who are secondary characters in the Mercy Thompson series). The story lines between the two series keep getting more integrated. Frost Burned ($26.95) stars Mercy and her regular set of characters, but when her husband and most of his pack of werewolves are abducted by a bunch of rogue government agents who want to use them as assassins, Mercy turns to some fey, a vampire, and out-of-town werewolves for help. The Moor (who has been developed as a character more in the Alpha and Omega series) is sent in to help save the pack. The book is a lot of fun if you're already familiar with both series, but don't try to start with this book.

Sergey and Marina Dyachenko are a married couple of Russian writers who have won some European awards, and The Scar ($7.99) is the first of their books to be translated into English.

Egert is an egotistical member of the military elite of the city of Kavarren. After he kills in a duel a hopelessly outclassed visiting student, he is challenged to a duel by a mysterious stranger—who leaves him with a scar that carries a curse of cowardice. Egert flees Kavarren and tries to find a way to lift the curse. The story spends more time on setting mood and on physical descriptions, and is generally more wordy than a typical American book that focuses much more on plot—but not enough so as to reduce the enjoyment of the story.

ones and enjoyed them. I picked up The Devil's Nebula ($7.99), first of the Weird Space series, and it was as if I had picked up a space opera from the 1960s (except for a lesbian relationship—I don't remember those from the 1960s space operas). Lots of fast action adventure without much concern for scientific plausibility or deep character analysis.

The human Expansion has been pushed back by the forces of the alien Vetch, but captain Ed Carew, pilot Lania Takiomar, and engineer Jed Neffard sneak their small space ship across the border to "salvage" art left behind in a museum on a planet where the Vetch drove out the humans. But there is also a mysterious crashed alien space ship of previously unknown design on the planet, which both the humans and the Vetch are puzzled about. After various dangerous encounters on the planet, Ed and crew take off, only to be captured by the forces of the Expansion government, which has been watching Ed's crew and their various "salvage" operations for some time. The government makes them an offer they can't refuse, sending them on a mysterious mission to the far side of Vetch space, where they find more alien artifacts and eventually uncover a plot by an alien race from another universe to conquer our universe, starting by taking over both the Vetch and the humans.

Satan's Reach ($7.99), the second in the Weird Space universe just came in and I haven't had time to read it yet. Flipping through it, it clearly continues the war against the aliens from another universe, but doesn't seem to follow Ed and his crew.

of a struggle - she trusted her attacker. Metternich insists that the Austrian authorities will handle the investigation, but the head of the British delegation also wants Malcolm, his top intelligence agent, to look into the matter. Tatiana was supplying information to the British, and no doubt to other parties at the Congress as well - perhaps she stumbled across a dangerous secret that led to her death. Suzanne and Malcolm soon learn that Tatiana had acquired compromising letters that could put some very powerful people in very difficult positions, adding blackmail to the list of possible motives. When the Austrians arrest Malcolm for the murder, Suzanne continues investigating with the assistance of her women friends. Suzanne is a great character, intelligent, capable, and unflappable - early in the book, when she and Malcolm are attacked on a dark street, she calmly shoots one of the attackers in the shoulder, twists her cape into a rope to haul Malcolm up onto a balcony, and joins him in a scrambling escape across the rooftops. In fact, the book is full of smart, capable, formidable women, from princesses to lady's maids to Malcolm's cousin Aline, who prefers mathematics to gossip, which comes in really handy when something needs to be decoded. I'm looking forward to more of the Rannochs' adventures in Imperial Scandal ($15.00) and The Paris Affair ($15.00).

Woof at the Door by Laura Morrigan ($7.99) is the first in a new series set in Florida. Grace Wilde is an animal behaviorist with a secret knack: she can communicate telepathically with animals. Sometimes using words, if the animal has the vocabulary, more often using images and emotions, including projecting waves of calming energy to soothe the animal. And animals can communicate with her in the same ways. Mostly she works with pets, but she also helps the zoo and the police deal with frightened animals. Which is how she winds up called to the scene of a murder; Jax, the victim's pet Doberman, is in a frenzy. As she calms him, she realizes that he saw the murderer, although at the moment he's so traumatized that he can't show her clearly, and that the killer was someone that the victim, and Jax, really trusted. provides an alibi), she has to decide. Will she share what she's learned from the animals in the case, and how she learned it? And, if she does, will the distractingly handsome Sergeant Kai Duncan believe her? If you love animals, you'll really enjoy watching Grace interact with them, whether she's trying to coax a panic-stricken young lemur off her head, or rescuing an injured giraffe, or helping Jax work through the trauma of losing his beloved master. Morrigan also supplies a solid plot with plenty of twists, and a good supporting cast of family and friends for Grace.

What's not to love about Odelia Grey? She's smart, independent, and happily middle-aged. She's a paralegal, but she doesn't let the overly demanding lawyer she works with push her around. Her dad loves her, but her stepfamily would fit right in on the Jerry Springer show. She's fat, and belongs to Reality Therapy, a support group for large people that dispenses advice, comfort, and support, and cheers on its members in their daily struggles in an unkind world. She goes walking most mornings with friends from the group. In Too Big to Miss by Sue Ann Jaffarian ($14.95), after Odelia's good friend Sophie London, the beautiful, confident woman who started Reality Check, commits suicide, Odelia learns that Sophie had an ex-husband, and a twenty-year-old son who thinks his mom died years ago. And that she was the star of her own adult website, and several dozen subscribers saw her shoot herself. What made her do it? At the wake, Odelia meets a handsome thirty-something man in a wheelchair - Greg Stevens, who worked with Sophie on her website. He's determined to find out what led to Sophie's death; Odelia isn't entirely sure she trusts him, but she agrees to help. One of the things I like best about the book is that, as they uncover information, they share it with the detective handling Sophie's case, which makes a refreshing change from the tiresome plot device of characters not telling the police, then winding up in deadly peril as a result.

Over by Victoria Hamilton ($7.99), I thought it had something to do with bowling. But it has to do with a glass bowl used to kill Kathy Cooper. Kathy and Jaymie Leighton were good friends until, for some reason, Kathy decided that Jaymie had done something awful to her. Because they had quarreled, Jaymie is one of the murder suspects. She sets out to discover what she did that upset Kathy. No one seems to know, but she finds lots of people who had fought with Kathy and had a motive to kill her.

In A Deadly Cliché by Ellery Adams ($7.99), Olivia Limoges has enough money to do whatever she wishes. What she doesn't wish is to find a dead body on the beach. She wonders if the dead man had anything to do with the strange robberies that are taking place. Weird clues are being left, butter with a knife through it, antique dolls with silver spoons in their mouths, and a deck of cards with one queen missing. Olivia and Laurel, a member of her writing group, interview the people who have been robbed, and realize who is guilty. When the robbers come to attack Laurel, Olivia is the only one who can help her.

I chose to read Diane Kelly's Death, Taxes, and Peach Sangria ($7.99) because of the title. What could those things have in common? Tara Holloway is an IRS special agent going after tax preparers who do phony tax preparations for people, promising them high returns. She and her partner are asked to find out how cash is being funneled to terrorists, but people are afraid to talk to them. Meanwhile Tara, her friends, and her co-workers are having problems finding the right person for them. Even peach sangria doesn't help them feel better. All this comes together when Tara realizes who is helping the terrorists.

dead body in her barn, Becca's mother is arrested for the crime. Becca is sure that her mother is innocent, and works with the police on the investigation.

What would you do if you found out that you were a witch? In It Takes a Witch by Heather Blake ($7.99), Darcy and Harper Merriweather were raised as though they had no powers until after their father's death. That's when their Aunt Velma tells them that they have the power to grant wishes, and they join her in Enchanted Village in Salem. When a woman who claims to have powers is strangled with their aunt's scarf and her boyfriend is found by the body, Aunt Velma assures them that her boyfriend is innocent. To help her, Darcy starts to investigate the case. The murder victim isn't well liked, but there are a few people who seem to care about her. It's all very confusing to Darcy, who is having enough problems learning her new powers.

State Fair by Earlene Fowler ($7.99) shows the inner workings of a small town state fair, where Benni Harper is working as a volunteer. First one of the quilts is stolen. Then her grandmother wants her to find out what's wrong with her great aunt, who is acting strangely. When Benni finds a dead body, her great aunt wants to investigate, and Benni has to go with her to keep her out of trouble. This isn't like TV or the movies. The killer isn't about to let them find out anything.

After something bad happened to Abby Cooper without warning, for the first time she began to doubt her abilities. In Crime Seen by Victoria Laurie ($7.99), to help her recover, her FBI agent boyfriend Dutch asks her to look at some cold cases, hoping that she will see something he missed. Instead she senses something about a case that Dutch had closed. Abby thinks the wrong person was sent to prison, and asks a PI friend to help her find out the truth. She ends up going undercover and finding out more than she wanted to know.
