How's Business by Don Blyly

We've had computer-related headaches. First, there's the website. Our home page (with our list of events) sometime loads in 2 seconds, sometimes in 30 seconds. The Newsletter Archive page and the older newsletters that you can click to from that page also load very slowly at times. These problems started when our hosting service changed servers a while back, and we'll be contacting them again to try to get the problem resolved. However, the newer parts of our website, including the shopping pages, load quickly pretty much all of the time. So for speedy online shopping, please go directly to www.unclehugo.com/prod/gateway.php

Then there was the problem with our e-mail account. Over about a five day period, I received a couple dozen "Fw: Hi" or "Fw: News" messages with a suspicious link, all from various aol.com accounts. I didn't click the link on any of them. Then one night hundreds of "Fw: Hi" messages with a suspicious link were sent out as if from UncleHugo@aol.com. I changed my password early the next morning when I learned of the problem. Aol.com was aware of the problem, and that MANY older aol accounts had been hit with this problem. Their story was that there are two different situations—in some cases the account had actually been hacked, in which case the "Fw: Hi" message would show up in the "Sent" file, and the message actually went through Aol servers; in most cases the Aol account name was being used to send messages through non-Aol servers. They alerted other major e-mail providers to not accept messages from Aol accounts unless the messages come from AOL servers. The "Fw: Hi" message did not appear in my "Sent" file, but it was obvious that it went to the addresses in my AOL address book. (All of the bounced back messages from Uncle Hugo's credit representatives at various publishing companies made it clear that it was from our address book, not just a random selection of addresses.) AOL claimed that 2% of their account were victims of this, but I heard a TV report that claimed it was closer to 20%.

The winter that refuses to end has continued to hurt business. Our business was WAY down for January, February, March, and April. We've heard the same is true for other local businesses. Government statistics says that bookstores nationwide saw a 9.5% decrease in sales in the first quarter. But around the first weekend of May, we had 4 break-even days in a row, for the first time since December. And the next weekend we had 3 days in a row of break-even or better. It's such a relief to at least break-even after months of heavy losses, and very nice to see some of our regular customers again!

The oldest LGBT bookstore in the U.S. is going out of business after 40 years (same age as Uncle Hugo's). The owner of the bookstore also owned the building (as is true of Uncle Hugo's/Uncle Edgar's). He had hoped that one of the specialty small publishers would buy his bookstore to insure continued retail exposure of their books, but nothing worked out. This reminded me of all the talk after Borders closed about how the publishers were so concerned about helping the independent bookstores survive, so that they could continue to be "show rooms" for the books that people then went to Amazon to order. I'm still waiting to see what they are going to do to help us survive. One of the smaller publishers that we do a little business with has decided to give retailers an extra 30 days to pay their bills. But from the big guys, I noticed a reduction in co-op advertising funds (which plays a small but appreciated role in helping to pay for this newsletter), but nothing else. (By the way, the newsletter also "show rooms" books that people then order from Amazon. We recently received a very generous contribution to the newsletter from a customer who buys e-books based on what he reads in our newsletter.)
