How's Business
by Don Blyly

I've seen some statistics recently about the book business for 2013. In England, the unit sales of books for 2013 was down about 4% compared to 2012. I'm not surprised by this, given how many bookstores have gone out of business in England in the last couple of years, making it harder for people to shop locally for books. In the U.S., the number of new titles published by regular publishers went down by about 1%, but the number of print-on-demand titles plummeted. The number of titles that went into the public domain in 2012 was very high, while the number of titles that went into the public domain in 2013 was much lower, which played a major role in the big swing in print-on-demand numbers. The percentage of the U.S. book market that has gone to e-books seems to be stuck around the same as for last year, but is still growing overseas (where e-readers became available years later than in the U.S., and where it is often more difficult to get print versions of books in a timely manner and at a reasonable price). In the U.S. for the first half of 2014, bookstore sales were down 7.9% compared to same period the year before. For all of retail, there was a 3.6% increase in sales for the first half of 2014.

There's been a lot of news coverage about what Amazon has been pulling to try to squeeze more favorable terms out of Hachette Book Group: refusing to accept advance orders for Hachette books, delaying shipment of Hachette books for weeks, suggesting on some Hachette authors' pages that readers might prefer to read books by non-Hachette authors instead, etc. Amazon has just recently started to claim that they are doing this because they want to force Hachette to rewrite the contracts with their authors to give more royalties to the authors—but nobody seems to be stupid enough to believe that. Recently a couple of regular customers came in and told me that they were so angry at what Amazon was doing that they wanted me to recommend a bunch of Hachette Books for them to buy, to help out both Uncle Hugo's and Hachette. I'm used to recommending by author or category, rather than by publisher, but I came up with some suggestions. My recommendations included James S. A. Corey's series that begins with Leviathan Wakes, Ancillary Justice by Ann Leckie, Gail Carriger's Parasol Protectorate series, Kate Elliott's series that begins with Cold Magic, N.K. Jemisin's series that begins with The Hundred Thousand Kingdoms, Karen Miller's series that begins with The Innocent Mage, Brent Weeks' series that begins with The Way of Shadows, and Brian McClellan's trilogy that begins with Promise of Blood, plus a few others that they were not interested in. They took most of my recommendations and left with a couple of bags of very good books.

We recently had a customer comment about how nice it was to be in a neighborhood with stores that had been around almost forever, such as Uncle Hugo's. I pointed out that Uncle Hugo's is only 40 years old and has only been in this location for 30 years, which is a short time compared to some of the stores that have been open for a really long time. I pointed out that Roberts Shoes has been around for over 75 years, Ingebretsen's (Scandinavian gifts and meat market) has been around for 90 years, and Shatzlein Saddle Shop has been around for over 100 years, but I agreed that it was nice to be in a neighborhood with stores that had been around for so long. On August 2 I was surprised to receive a postcard at home announcing that Roberts Shoes was having a Going Out of Business Sale after 77 years (during which they sold over 2 million pairs of shoes and boots) at the corner of Chicago and Lake. I had just bought a new pair of shoes at Roberts a few days before, and the owner didn't say anything about going out of business. I guess I'll have to pick up a new pair of winter boots before they run out of my size. I have no idea what will be going into the space next, but it's hard to believe that they will be as good a neighbor as Roberts Shoes has been.

A couple of months ago we sold out of the Uncle Hugo's/Uncle Edgar's book bags, and we were low or out of several sizes of t-shirts, so I tried to contact the screen printer we've been using for about 30 years. I eventually found out that they had gone out of business a few months earlier. I got a recommendation for another screen printer, but when I contacted them I was told that the owners were approaching the age of 70, and they didn't want to take on any more business. I contacted a third screen printer who had been recommended to me, and he was happy to accept our business. However, our old screen printer had allowed us to combine t-shirts, sweatshirts, and book bags to reach a large enough order to get a decent discount; the new screen printer allowed us to combine t-shirts and sweatshirts to make one order, but insisted that book bags had to be a separate minimum order because they required different equipment. His first suggestion for size and price for book bags would have resulted in a huge jump in the price we would have to charge for book bags. He later came up with another, more reasonably priced, book bag suggestion, and said he would explore some other options for book bags after he finished the t-shirt and sweatshirt order. We have now gotten restocked with t-shirts (sizes adult small through XXL) and sweatshirts (sizes L through XXL). The t-shirts are in ash (gray), azalea (light pink), black, cyber pink (dark pink), gold, kelly green, Pacific blue (close to turquoise), purple, red, retro heather coral (light orange), and royal blue (dark blue), and the price through XL is $14 and for XXL the price is $17. The sweatshirts are in ash, forest green, red, and royal blue, and the price is $24 for L or XL and $30 for XXL. Our shopping basket is not set up to easily order t-shirts or sweatshirts for mail orders—just e-mail what you are interested in and I'll e-mail back what we have left and how to order it. Some of the shirts have Uncle Hugo's logo on the front and Uncle Edgar's logo on the back, and other shirts have Uncle Edgar's logo on the front and Uncle Hugo's logo on the back. We hope to get restocked with book bags before the holiday season.

Hennepin County has been running a "Choose to Reuse" promotion for several years, and we've participated in their fall coupon book for several years. The new coupon book became effective August 1, and the coupon for Uncle Hugo's/Uncle Edgar's gives you a 20% discount on used books and used magazines (and used audio books, although the coupon doesn't mention them). The coupon does not combine with the discount card, and is only valid for in-store purchases, not for mail orders. The coupon book also contains coupons for several other used book stores, several used record stores, several equipment rental places, lots of used clothing (both kids and adult) outlets, etc. The coupon books are available at all Hennepin County libraries and lots of other Hennepin County offices. In the past, they've also mailed out a lot of coupon books to Hennepin County home addresses, but I haven't seen one in my mail yet. They also sent us 200 copies of the coupon book, so we have a display of them near the front door.

Short Recommendations by Don Blyly

I've been a big fan of Wen Spencer's Tinker series. The Chinese put a satellite into orbit to generate a hyperphase gate to allow space ships to jump to distant parts of the universe, but it had an unexpected side effect—it sent Pittsburgh to a parallel world, Elfhome. Once a month the gate is turned off for 24 hours to bring Pittsburgh back to Earth, and some people leave Pittsburgh, other people enter Pittsburgh (mainly graduate students doing research on various aspects of Elfhome), and a month's worth of supplies are trucked into Pittsburgh. Then Pittsburgh goes back to Elfhome, land of the elves, where magic works, strange and dangerous critters and plants exist, and even the stars are different. Tinker is an 18-year-old orphan, a genius who runs a junkyard in Pittsburgh so that she has ready access to parts for her inventions, and she's also trying to come up with a quantum mechanical explanation for magic. The first 3 books in the series, Tinker ($7.99), Wolf Who Rules ($7.99), and Elfhome ($7.99), take place primarily in Pittsburgh and on Elfhome, with Tinker as the main character. It seems that there is a third world also linked to Earth and Elfhome, and the bad guys from the third world are trying to conquer Elfhome and have already infiltrated some Earth governments. The fourth book in the series, Wood Sprites ($25.00, early September), is set on Earth with a whole new set of characters. Louise and Jillian are a pair of brilliant 9 year old fraternal twins in New York City who manage to get into a lot of trouble together. After one of their misadventures, they discover that their blood type is different from the blood type of the couple that they thought were their parents. After hacking into their parents' medical records, they discover that their parents weren't able to have kids naturally, but their father worked in a fertility clinic and managed to steal a couple of frozen fertilized eggs where the parents were listed as dead, so nobody would miss the eggs. They also discover that they already have an older sister (Tinker), and that there are four more fertilized eggs left that could become more brothers and sisters for them. They set out to steal those eggs and somehow get them born, and they come up with brilliant schemes, but without an adult understanding of the difficulty or consequences of their schemes. In the process, they discover the bad guys who have infiltrated the Chinese government and the UN, and the bad guys discover them. They gather an interesting set of accomplices, have many adventures, but still haven't met Tinker by the end of the book. It's obvious that the twins and their band of accomplices will be united with Tinker in the next book. I think you could enjoy this book without reading the first three Tinker books, but you'd want to read all four books before moving on to the next novel.

I picked up The Thousand Names by Diango Wexler ($7.99) because the publisher smashed up a copy of the paperback reprint, so I decided to read it before returning it, and it's very good. In the first book, the Vordan Empire has in effect been ruling the land of Khandar through an "alliance" with the totally corrupt and not very bright prince of Khandar. The people of Khandar finally get fed up and overthrow the prince and chase the colonial forces out of the capital, through an alliance between some religious fanatics, the local troops that were trained and equipped by the Vordan Empire but decided to switch sides, and some desert tribes that are magic users. The remaining few colonial troops are waiting at a run-down fort on the edge of Khandar, hoping the fleet will show up and take them home. When the fleet shows up, they bring a new, very bright, but totally inexperienced colonel (who of course is of the nobility, because you cannot have commoners commanding troops) and about 4000 new troops. The colonel decides that the snake-pit of politics in the Empire will crush him if he does the smart thing and heads for home, so he decides to re-take Khandar even if his forces are outnumbered 10 to 1. This is very good muskets and magic military fiction, with interesting characters, interesting plotting, vivid battle scenes, and great world building. The second in the series, The Shadow Throne ($25.95), just arrived in hardcover. The action shifts back to the Vordan capital, where the king is old and dying, his daughter is underestimated by everybody, and the head of the secret police has access to lots of dark magic. The head of the secret police is sure that as soon as the king dies, he will be able to rule the empire by intimidating the daughter, as he already intimidates most of the rest of the capital. A handful of characters, including the princess and some of the characters from the first book, are determined to stop him. The second book is even better than the first.

I've enjoyed every book I've read by Robert Charles Wilson, and the latest novel, Burning Paradise ($8.99), continues the winning streak. This is set in 2014 in the U.S., but not our 2014 or our U.S. There has been no major war since the Great War of 1914. A very few people have figured out that the radio band around the Earth is inhabited by an alien being, which has been altering all the radio, tv, and telephone messages that pass through the radio band, toning down propaganda and disrupting attempts to start wars. It's not clear if the alien being is a parasite or a symbiont and it's not clear what the alien's goals are. When the people who had discovered the alien started looking at ways to disrupt it, the alien sent out teams of simulacrum ("sims", which look like humans but have lots of green stuff inside) in 2007 to kill many of the researchers. The survivors scattered and have been in hiding ever since. Now new sims are approaching the survivors, telling them that a new alien parasite has attacked the old alien parasite and the new parasite has different goals than the old parasite. A group of the surviving researchers decide to try to disrupt the plans of whichever parasite is now in charge, regardless of the effect on the rest of the human race. After reading Burning Paradise, I picked up a copy of Julian Comstock ($8.99), which is one of the few Robert Charles Wilson books that I had not read, and I think it is now my favorite book by him. It is set in the U.S. in the late 22nd century, after the oil (mostly) ran out, big agriculture crashed, the cities fell, and much of the population died. The book is "written" by a character within the book, with all the prejudices and shortcomings of his class and time. Society is made up of the hereditary aristocrats/land owners, the lease class (somewhat skilled workers), and the indentured class (basically slaves). The government is made up of three groups, the hereditary government officials, the military, and the Dominion of Jesus Christ on Earth (which controls which churches are allowed, handles censorship and education, and pushes the rest of government to speed the day when the Dominion rules the Earth, which results in a constant state of warfare). The "author" is Adam Hazzard, a member of the lease class in the western part of the expanded U.S., who met Julian Comstock, nephew to the insane and murderous President Deklan Comstock, when Julian's mother sent the boy to the west to make it more difficult for the President to fly into a rage and order him killed. As Adam, Julian, and Julian's bodyguard Sam set out on their long, strange journey, Adam chronicles their adventures, complete with footnotes (including one explaining that it was the 52nd amendment which provided for succession by inheritance, which is frequently confused with the 53rd amendment, which abolished the Supreme Court). There are sly bits of humor along the way that Adam would not recognize as humor, but the reader does recognize. Highly recommended.

Marked by Alex Hughes ($7.99) is the third in the series, after Clean ($7.99) and Sharp ($7.99), about Adam Ward, a telepath working for the police in the Atlanta area about a century in the future. He interviews suspects and helps with murder investigations, but many of the police are not comfortable working with a telepath. I've enjoyed all of the books (and they should be read in order), but I thought Marked was significantly better than the first two.

A Call to Duty by David Weber and Timothy Zahn ($25.00, coming early October) is the first of a new series set generations before the Honor Harrington series, as Manticore starts building up its space navy. I enjoyed it more than the last few Honorverse novels, because the universe at the time of the recent Honorverse novels seems to be filled with hundreds of characters the reader is supposed to keep track of and the plots have become so convoluted. The new series introduces all new characters (not a Harrington in sight) in a somewhat familiar universe (the House of Lords is a snake pit, the Republic of Haven is still a republic and an ally), but there's plenty of action against pirates. The new series can be enjoyed without having read the Honor Harrington series, but will be enjoyed even more by people who have been reading the Honor Harrington books.

Premonitions by Jamie Schultz ($7.99) is an urban fantasy book with some interesting twists. Karyn has uncontrolled precognitive abilities, so that she can see lots of possible alternative outcomes from her actions, but she can easily be overwhelmed by these visions unless she is using a very expensive underground drug to suppress these hallucinations. Her friend Anna has organized a criminal crew to use Karyn's abilities for high-profit thefts to make enough money to keep Karyn supplied with the drug. Often these thefts involve items that are magical, or at least that somebody with a lot of money thinks are magical. The crew becomes so good that they come to the attention of a notorious crime lord, who is known to be ruthless and rumored to be a practitioner of dark magic, and he makes them an offer they can't refuse. Lots of mayhem and double-crossing results. I enjoyed this book, and the plot is resolved by the end of the book, but it is the beginning of a series.

Recommendations by Elizabeth LaVelle

The White Magic Five and Dime ($14.99) by Steve Hockensmith (of Holmes on the Range fame) and tarot expert Lisa Falco introduces us to Alanis McLachlan (at least, that's what she's currently calling herself). Raised by a con-artist mother she hasn't seen in 20 years, Alanis isn't surprised to learn her mother has been murdered. Which takes her to Berdache, Arizona, a town with "vortexes" of psychic energy around it and a small herd of occult bookstores, New Age shops, and tarot readers. Now the owner of The White Magic Five & Dime, the apartment above it, a Cadillac, and her mom's bank account, and convinced that her mother was killed by someone she'd screwed over, Alanis decides that the best way to find out who that might be is to reopen the shop. Trained from childhood to cold-read people the better to con them, she figures that tarot is just another con, and she can easily pick up the jargon she needs to do readings for her mother's clients. It's a reasonable plan, but as the plot twists, the people she meets and the readings she does present her with choices other than the cynical, cautious detachment that governed her personality for so long. I can't remember when I've read a book with such fascinating development of a main character. We learn about Alanis from seeing what she's thinking versus what she decides to say, from flashbacks to her unsettling and sometimes perilous childhood and teen years working short and long cons with her mother, and from watching her interactions with people in the present day, as she reflects on what her upbringing tells her to do, and then decides what she's going to do. The woman she is at the end of the book is quite different from the woman she was at the beginning, and we've watched that transition every step of the way. I'm really looking forward to more books in the series.

A Tine to Live, a Tine to Die ($7.99) by Edith Maxwell lured me in with the cover art, lots of lovely fresh veggies. When Cam Flaherty is downsized from her computer job just as her great-uncle Albert has to stop farming, she is happy to take over his New England farm. She spent summers at the farm as a kid and loves growing things. And she's excited about pursuing organic certification for the farm, where she grows fruits, vegetables, flowers, and herbs. When her farmhand shows up drunk just after Cam has found a jug of pesticide he'd stashed in the barn, she fires him, and then winds up a suspect when he's murdered with a pitchfork on the property. The book has a nice cast of characters, including Cam's Uncle Albert, who has retired nearby, her childhood friend Ruthie, now a local cop with two small daughters, Ellie Kosloski, a Girl Scout who's earning a badge working on the farm, Lucinda DaSilva, a farm volunteer who also heads the town's Locavore Club, and Jake Ericsson, a chef who owns a local gourmet restaurant. I shop at a co-op and buy lots of local and organic food, so it was fun to read a book where the characters are really into local produce, local beer, local wine, sustainability, and supporting local producers. Cam is a geek who isn't really used to dealing with people, so it was interesting to watch her learning to interact with her CSA shareholders and people at the local farmer's market. I also enjoyed the fact that Jake, who seems a likely candidate to be Cam's romantic interest, was described as "substantial" and "clearly fond of his own cooking" - I'm a big fan of characters in all shapes and sizes, who aren't constantly obsessing about their weight. And a plot that deals with immigration issues and a local hate group/militia makes this cozy solidly contemporary.

The Whole Cat and Caboodle ($7.99) by Sofie Ryan (who also writes the Magical Cats mysteries as Sofie Kelly) takes us to North Harbor, Maine. Sarah Grayson spent summers there with her gram and her gram's friends Rose, Liz, Charlotte, and Maddie. Now she's opened a shop selling refurbished and repurposed items, and been adopted by a cat named Elvis. When Maddie is arrested for the murder of her beau, Sarah has no intention of getting involved, but Rose, Liz, and Charlotte are determined to clear Maddie's name. Charlotte's son Nick, who is working on the case for the medical examiner's office, quickly realizes there's no way he can stop the determined women, and drafts Sarah to try to keep them out of trouble. The plot develops plenty of twists as they look into the dead man's less than pristine past. I enjoyed the older characters in this book, each one a distinct individual (rather than generic grannies-who-crochet-and-bake), including Alfred Peterson, Rose's sometimes-comical neighbor at the senior apartments, who turns out to have really excellent computer skills. The younger characters were fun, too: Mac, who can repair anything, gave up financial planning to crew on sailboats and work at the shop; Avery, Liz's teen granddaughter who works at the shop, is independent and speaks her mind without crossing over into brat territory; Sarah's friend Jess restyles clothing, makes quilts, and tries to get Sarah to think about stuff other than work occasionally; Nick is back in town after years away and trying to get his mom to accept his career choice; and of course Elvis, who has excellent people skills and is a really good listener, in addition to the more common cat trait of getting into mischief. I was happy to see that the next book in the series will be out in spring 2015.

Also set in Maine is the Lucy Stone series. I recently read the first book, Mistletoe Murder ($6.99, originally titled Mail-Order Murders), and I can see why the series has been so popular for so long. The town residents are a mix of long-time inhabitants and younger people who moved there a decade or so ago to get away from the rat race, like Lucy and her husband Bill, idealistic college graduates who wanted to get back on the land. Now they're living in the old house they refurbished, and raising a family together. Bill works days, and Lucy works the late shift taking phone orders for the booming local mail-order business. When she finds the business owner dead in his car, it looks like suicide, but when it turns out to be murder, her curiosity lures her into investigating. But that's almost incidental to everything else going on: holiday preparations, Scout events, school pageants, finding a new kitten for her kids, trying to help her mother adjust to widowhood, and finding time for her husband and her friends. I really liked Lucy's warm-hearted approach to life - a trip to get a kitten takes her to a trailer on a dirt road outside town, and leads to a return trip to give the young woman there some groceries and kids' clothes. I loved the fact that when her neighbor Officer Culpepper brings the state police to Lucy's house to talk to her, Culpepper washes the dirty dishes while Lucy answers questions. And I enjoyed the wide range of local characters both young and old, and the way people pulled together to help each other out. I can look forward to lots of return visits to Tinker's Cove. We stock the entire series, books 2-19 are $6.99 or $7.99 each, with Christmas Carol Murder ($7.99, #20) and French Pastry Murder ($25.00 hc, #21) arriving in October.

I enjoyed my return visit to Miracolo Italian restaurant and the Angelotta clan. Basil Instinct ($7.99) by Shelley Costa opens with Maria Pia, Eve's nonna (as Eve says, Italian for "annoying grandmother"), being invited to join Belfiere, an exclusive secret society of Italian women chefs. To do this, she'll have to get a tattoo on the wrist of her stirring hand, and cook a lavish meal members at the restaurant for the other 49. Eve and her cousin Landon research the society, and find some alarming information. When the sous chef they've hired to help out is found dead in the restaurant the day of the Belfiere event, it looks like a natural death, so Eve and Landon decide to hide the body until after the event. When hunky lawyer Joe Beck shows up partway through this process, and points out signs of electrocution, things get more complicated. And the fact that the woman has a Belfiere tattoo further convinces Eve she will need to protect Maria Pia from this dangerous organization - by crashing the upcoming initiation ceremony at a spooky mansion. In addition to the loopy hijinks at the restaurant, Eve has also been talked into teaching a cooking class at the local community center, only to discover that several of the students are from a nearby school for problem kids. When two of the boys act up big time, Eve decides to solve the problem by inventing mobster Don Lolo Dinardo (portrayed by her cousin Choo Choo channeling Marlon Brando as Don Vito Corleone). But, as is common with Eve's plans, things don't work out quite as expected. The book had plenty of funny moments, but Eve spent a lot of time doing things on her own, which wasn't quite as funny as the group comedy of series opener You Cannoli Die Once ($7.99).

As much as I love reading mysteries (and selling them to people), sometimes I'm just not in the mood for a string of dead bodies, so recently I've been reading Alexander McCall Smith. The No. 1 Ladies' Detective Agency ($14.95) and The Tears of the Giraffe ($14.95) are the first two books in his kinder, gentler mystery series featuring Precious Ramotswe. With the money Mma Ramotswe inherits on her father's death, she decides to pursue her calling - to help people solve the mysteries in their lives - by becoming the first woman private detective in Botswana. So she opens an office, puts out a sign, and soon finds herself in demand, checking on the creditworthiness of potential business partners, investigating suspected fraud, and more. The first book includes some back story about the rigors of her father's life working in the mines in South Africa, as well as Mma Ramotswe's experiences during her early, short-lived marriage to an abusive husband, but soon moves on to her detective cases. She discovers the truth about a missing husband, exposes a con man, and searches for a missing boy who may have been taken by witch doctors. In the second book, she looks for the truth behind a young U.S. man's disappearance ten years earlier. She also promotes her highly observant and capable secretary Mma Makutsi to assistant private detective and assigns her first case, trailing a wife whose husband believes she is having an affair. What they learn leads them to an ethical dilemma, to which Mma Makutsi devises a surprising solution. Mr. J.L.B. Matekoni heads over to the local orphanage to do some repairs, and is talked into bringing home two orphans, then realizes his wife-to-be Mma Ramotswe is likely to be surprised by this development. Meanwhile, Mr. Matekoni's lazy and unpleasant cleaning lady can see that his marriage to Mma Ramotswe will mean the end of her cushy job unless she can come up with a scheme to prevent it, but her plan to get Mma Ramotswe out of the picture backfires in a most satisfying way. These books have intelligent, big-hearted characters who work hard to provide the best possible outcomes for everyone involved - whether it's detective work, an engine repair, or providing a future for a child - and a refreshing lack of violence and corpses, as well as philosophical musings about topics both large and small, from Africa's politics, history, and future to the difficulty of refusing a request from a strong-minded orphanage matron. We carry the entire series, books 3-14 are $14.95 or $15.00 each, and The Handsome Man's Deluxe Cafe ($24.95 hc, #15) is expected in November.

Many years before she opened the No. 1 Ladies' Detective Agency, Mma Ramotswe solved her first cases while she was a schoolgirl. Alexander McCall Smith is now sharing these early stories with us in a delightful series of chapter books for ages 7 and up, illustrated by Iain McIntosh. In The Great Cake Mystery ($6.99), cakes and other treats are disappearing from the children's lunches. When two of the children jump to conclusions and falsely accuse a third, Precious hopes to prove his innocence. She finds a clue to the real culprits, but how can she catch them in the act? With great ingenuity, she sets the perfect trap in her very first case. In The Mystery of Meerkat Hill ($6.99), Precious makes friends with two new students, a brother and sister, and goes to their house to play with them and their pet meerkat, who loves to sit on the back of the family's cow. When the cow disappears, she helps them search, following the cow's tracks to a big herd of cattle. The men who own the herd insist the cattle all belong to them, but Precious figures out a way to prove which cow belongs to the family. The books include gentle lessons about being kind and fair to each other, and are infused with love for the culture and landscape of Botswana. The Mystery of the Missing Lion ($6.99), the third book in the series, will be arriving in October.

Tamar Myers provides a less tranquil but equally entertaining view of Africa in The Witch Doctor's Wife ($13.99), first in her series set in the Belgian Congo in the late 1950s, just as the independence movement is gaining ground there. Myers draws on her experiences living there with her missionary parents during that era. The Belgian government controls everything, especially the lucrative diamond mines. The native tribes live in a perilous world: a trip to the river to bathe or do laundry may mean death by crocodile attack; being caught away from home after dark puts you at risk of jackal or hyena attack; raising crops brings the daily risk of death by snakebite; and malnutrition caused by lack of protein is common. Young Amanda Brown from the southern U.S. has just arrived here to run a guesthouse for missionaries. She's in for a massive dose of culture shock, starting with the fact that her blue eyes lead to the natives naming her Mamu Ugly Eyes (the guesthouse housekeeper is a man called Protruding Navel, and the servant she soon hires is called Cripple). And that's before she learns about all the animosities: between the educated, Europeanized natives and the traditional tribal natives; between the various native tribes; and between the Flemish Belgians and the Walloon Belgians, both of whom look down on the Portuguese. The plot, told from multiple viewpoints, includes power struggles within the Belgian diamond consortium, a tangle of love affairs among the European residents, jealousy between wives, mysterious deaths and disappearances, and one spectacular diamond that never seems to be where it should be. By the end of the book, Amanda is less naive than when she arrived, but no less idealistic. The series continues with The Headhunter's Daughter ($13.99), The Boy Who Stole the Leopard's Spots ($14.99), and The Girl Who Married an Eagle ($13.99).

Wrapped by Jennifer Bradbury ($8.99, ages 12 and up) takes us to 1815 London. Napoleon is once again on the loose, England fears invasion, and 17-year-old Agnes Wilkins is not as excited as her mother thinks she should be about making her debut into polite society. Agnes would rather be learning languages (10 so far), traveling abroad (Egypt particularly interests her), or reading a book (preferably by A Lady, known to us in modern times as Jane Austen). The very eligible Lord Showalter hosts a mummy-unwrapping party, and chooses Agnes to be one of the guests invited to slice into the wrappings and keep any trinkets they find. Annoyed at being thrust into the spotlight, when Agnes finds a carved jackal's head with a strip of linen knotted to it, she impulsively tucks it away without showing it to anyone - an act that will lead her into an adventure involving ancient artifacts, cryptic messages, French spies, and Napoleon's plans for world conquest. Agnes is intrepid and resourceful, and the fact that she finds aspiring Egyptologist Caedmon Stowe more intriguing than Lord Showalter is just one more thing to like about her.

Mystery Reviews by Gerri Balter

I love animals even though I don't live with any. One of the things I enjoy about Cookie Dough or Die by Virginia Lowell ($7.99) is the mischief Olivia Greyson's dog Spunky gets into. He's the comic relief in what starts out as a sad story. Clarisse Chamberlain is a close friend of Olivia's. When she dies, Olivia is very sad. She has a feeling that Clarisse's death isn't an accident but murder. Clarisse has left her a message she doesn't understand. She thinks it has something to do with why Clarisse has been murdered. Then she finds out that Clarisse has left her a large sum of money and some valuable antique cookie cutters. There are those who wonder if Olivia is the killer. When the nosy postman becomes ill after eating some of the cookies from their cookie store, Olivia becomes the prime suspect in lots of people's minds. She's going to have to find out who the killer is before the killer finishes her off.

A Deal to Die For by Josie Belle ($7.99) begins with Vera Madison's murder. She's found in the home of Dr. John Franklin by Maggie Gerber. Maggie is fond of Dr. Franklin, but something is wrong. His wife openly expresses her hatred for Vera Madison. He says he's responsible for Vera's murder. Maggie refuses to believe that. She is convinced he's lying, but doesn't know why. In the meantime, Vera's daughter, Bianca, is trying not to lose her home and inheritance. It seems that a woman has come to town who claims that everything belongs to her because she is the daughter of Vera's dead husband. Could she have murdered Vera to make sure she gets everything? Maggie isn't sure, but she won't stop until she finds out the truth.

Poor Mace. All she wanted to do was help her mother find her wedding ring that she lost after she drank too much in Mama Gets Trashed by Deborah Sharp ($14.99). Mama thinks it got dumped in the trash. While Mace and her mother looking for it in the dump, Mace finds the body of a librarian wearing very sexy clothes. The people in town are more shocked by the sexy clothes than the murder. Mace's younger sister worked in the same library and wants Mace to find out the killer. While Mace's older sister thinks her husband is cheating on her and she wants Mace to prove it. Mace is so busy helping her two sisters that she ignores her fiancé and her job working with animals while the killer wants to be sure Mace doesn't find out anything.
