34th Anniversary Sale

December 1 marks Uncle Edgar's 34th anniversary. Come into Uncle Edgar's or Uncle Hugo's and save 10% off everything except discount cards, gift certificates, or merchandise already marked 40% off. A discount card will save you even more—you'll get 10% from the discount card plus another 10% off from the sale. (Sale prices apply to in-store purchases, not to mail orders.) The sale runs Friday, November 28 through Sunday, December 7, giving you two weekends to take advantage of the sale.

Small Business Saturday, which is the Saturday after Thanksgiving, also happens to be during the Anniversary Sale.

We will also be having our annual inventory reduction sale December 26-31, but that will feature deep discounts on things we really, really want to get rid of. It will not be a store-wide sale like the 34th Anniversary Sale.

Award News

The Hugo Award for Best Novel went to Ancillary Justice by Ann Leckie ($16.00).

The British Crime Writers Association announced that the CWA Diamond Dagger for an outstanding body of work in crime fiction went to Simon Brett, the CWA Goldsborough

Holiday Gift Ideas

Our most popular gift option continues to be our gift certificate. We can issue one for any amount. It can be used at either or both Uncles. It can even be used for mail orders, and it can be purchased over the phone (if you have a Visa, Mastercard, or Discover Card) and we can mail it either to the purchaser or to the recipient, or we can just enter the balance on a credit file here in the store to avoid the risk of the gift certificate being lost.

Calendars used to be a very popular gift item, but so many people are now using assorted electrical devices in place of a wall calendar that we substantially reduced our selection of calendars this year. Some titles that we ordered were not produced; the distributor shipped us a Weather Guide calendar instead of the Game of Thrones calendar we had ordered; and apparently the publishers and the wholesalers were also very cautious about calendars this year, because we've already sold out of about half the titles that came in and we haven't been able to get replacement copies for any of the titles we sold out of. If you want a calendar for 2015, you better hurry.

Signed books are also very popular gift items. Some recently received signed adult books at Uncle Hugo's include Hawk by Steven Brust ($24.99), The Witch With No Name by Kim Harrison ($26.99), and Prince Lestat by Anne Rice ($28.95); recently received signed young adult novels include Ambassador by William Alexander ($16.99), The Witch's Boy by Kelly Barnhill ($16.99), and Clariel

How's Business? by Don Blyly

The oldest independent bookstore in the Twin Cities, The Bookcase in Wayzata, went out of business in mid-October (although one major media outlet reported it as "the last independent bookstore in the Twin Cities" going out of business), after 51 years in business. I've heard rumors of other independent bookstores being in rough shape. The Barnes & Noble on Ford Parkway in St. Paul is also going out of business. And we're not doing very well either.

Last winter was very rough for us (and almost every other business in the area). Things picked up once the weather improved, but they didn't get back this summer to the level of the previous summer, and nowhere near the level of 5 years ago. Now the cold weather is back, and we had a terrible October and expect another rough winter. During the coldest, darkest part of the winter, people want to get home from work and then not go back outside again. So we normally see very few people after 6 pm in January and February. I ran some sales numbers for last January, February, and March and found that for January and February we lost money by being open for both the 6-7 pm period and the 7-8 pm period. By March, sales had picked up enough that we were making money by being open in the evening. We are going to try having Special Winter Hours this winter, for the first time in 40 years. We'll be open our regular hours through the end of 2014. For January and February, we will be closing at 7 pm instead of 8 pm Monday through Friday, and hope that the few people who would have wandered in after 7 pm will instead wander in before 7 pm.

While the entire retail sector of the economy continues to grow, the bookstore sales continue to decline, with the bookstore sector doing significantly worse than the entire retail sector, and I don't expect that to change in the near future. Part of the problem is competition from e-books and part is competition from Amazon and part is heavy discounting on a few bestselling titles by Walmart, Sam's Club, Costco, etc. (which is more of a problem for Uncle Edgar's than Uncle Hugo's since they tend to carry several titles by bestselling thriller and mystery authors and have rarely carried any science fiction or fantasy titles since the last Harry Potter book seven years ago). If enough people do all their book buying at Walmart, etc., pretty soon the only books they will be able to buy are the few that Walmart, etc., choose to carry because all of the bookstores will be out of business. And part of the problem is that the publishers are putting out a lot of books that people are not very interested in reading. Looking over the publishers' catalogs for the winter, Elizabeth and I found a few titles to get excited about and a lot of titles where the decision was "should we pick up 1 copy just in case somebody is interested, or should we just skip it?" Fortunately, most of the publishers have finally figured out that they were putting out a lot more paranormal romances than anybody was willing to read. Unfortunately, they just switched the genre code from "paranormal romance" to "urban fantasy" on a lot of the paranormal romances that they already had under contract. And this then made readers a lot more cautious about picking up anything labeled "urban fantasy," hurting the sales of the good books as well as the bad books. Publishers still haven't figured out that they are putting out a lot more zombie books than people want. The huge number of people who go on a "Zombie Pub Crawl" are not primarily major book readers.

Some of you might be asking yourself what you can do to help the Uncles survive. Buying books from us would certainly help, but I realize that this can be influenced by your personal financial situation and how many books the publishers put out that you are interested in reading. But there are several other things you can do to help:

- 1) Recommend the Uncles to people. Over the years, we've tried all kinds of advertising, including newspapers, TV, radio, assorted yellow pages, and various internet-based things, and none of them have been cost-effective. Last March for Uncle Hugo's 40th anniversary, we spent $1300 sponsoring Minnesota Public Radio for the first day of the sale. We had three new customers come into the store because of the sponsorship, plus several regular customers who thanked us for the sponsorship. Not cost-effective. The single most effective way for us to get new customers has always been personal recommendations from current customers. Positive reviews on various social media sites also help.
- 2) Give your friends and relatives gift certificates from the Uncles for the holidays, birthdays, anniversaries, etc., or request them for yourself. There are several ways we can handle gift certificates. We can hand the gift certificate to the purchaser (if the purchaser is in the store) for them to deliver to the recipient. We can mail the gift certificate to the recipient. We can hold onto the gift certificate behind the counter for the recipient to come in and pick up in person. Or we can just put a credit balance on file for the recipient and not mess with the actual certificate. (Since the certificate has to be physically present to be used, the credit-on-file option works best when the recipient is not in the metro area and will be using it for mail orders).
- 3) Printing and mailing the paper newsletter costs us about $5.00 per person per year. The paper newsletter has to fit into the 32-page format, so many titles get left out, many book descriptions get shortened, and most of the book reviews are left out of the paper version. The expanded version, available for free at our website, is usually 55-60 pages long. I recently got around to reading Bellwether ($7.99), a delightful short novel by Connie Willis from 1996. Sandra Foster is a statistician working in a research facility for a large dysfunctional corporation where Scott Adam's Dilbert would feel right at home. Her project is to figure out how fads begin and spread, and she hasn't been having much success. She meets Bennett O'Reilly, a physicist specializing in chaos theory who lost his previous grant and is now stuck working in the same corporate facility. When the paperwork for his next corporate project (involving dispersal of new skills through a group of monkeys) gets lost somewhere in the corporation, Sandra suggests that they save his job by merging his defunded project with her project. She doesn't have enough money in her budget to buy him any monkeys, but she has a rancher friend who is willing to loan them a bunch of sheep as long as the corporation feeds them. Neither Sandra or Bennett have any experience with sheep, so the idea of trying to teach new tricks to sheep and charting the dispersal of knowledge through the herd of sheep seems like a good idea to both of them. The entire book is a delight, but the sheep portion is particularly humorous.

Naturally, the thought of a corporation trying to find a way to create a fad made me think of publishers sending authors on tours to promote their books, and how much author tours have changed over the last 40 years. Although Uncle Hugo's was much smaller for the first 10 years, and there were many more bookstores in the metro area back then, we had some wonderful author events back then. Here are three examples:

Douglas Adams was on his first U.S. tour for The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, and the publisher sent him to Minneapolis to parade him through B. Dalton's headquarters to try to get B. Dalton to push The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy through the entire chain. But Douglas Adams was so unknown at the time that nobody else in the metro area was willing to host an event for him, so Uncle Hugo's got him. We didn't have a huge number of customers come in to get his signature, but Scott Imes and I had a great time talking with him for an hour in between customers asking for his signature. After that tour, he was in such demand that we never had another chance to see him.

Frank Herbert also didn't draw a huge crowd, but later in the evening he ended up with a few people back at Scott Imes' apartment, a block from the store. Frank asked Scott why he had 3 copies of Dune on his bookshelf. Scott told him that his other 5 copies were currently loaned out to people that Scott thought needed to read it. Frank really like that answer.

Anne McCaffrey drew a crowd that went out the door and half a block down the street. Fortunately, the weather was good. She came back about 10 years later, when we were in our current location, and again the line was out the door and half a block down the street.

A lot fewer authors are sent on tour to Minneapolis these days (and very few authors are willing to come to Minneapolis in the winter). What has changed? While B. Dalton headquarters was in Bloomington, a lot of authors were run through Minneapolis to be introduced to the book buyers. And if the author was already in Minneapolis anyway, they might as well do a signing or two. When B. Dalton was sold to Barnes & Noble and the book buying function was moved to New York City, the number of authors sent to Minneapolis went down quite a bit.

In the early days of Uncle Hugo's, we didn't have the internet or cable TV. Almost all readers looked through a local physical newspaper, and the newspapers carried listings of book events. If the publisher could arrange a signing at a bookstore, and the bookstore sent a notice to the local newspapers, that translated to free advertising for both the book and the bookstore, and many book readers were likely to see the event notice when they looked through the newspaper. Those days are long gone.

In the early days of Uncle Hugo's, people were only able to get the few local TV stations. And the local commercial stations all had at least a couple of hours of locally produced talk shows in the morning, and they were hungry for anything interesting to fill all those hours. Authors on tour were interesting and could almost always get scheduled for at least one and sometimes for a couple of those talk shows while they were in town. Even I was on the channel 11 morning talk show a couple of times in the early years. With so few choices for stations, if a TV was turned on in the morning, it was either on one of those local talk shows or PBS, and the exposure was very broad for the author. Now, the stations seem to find it more profitable and less trouble to run national talk shows for most of the morning (so the publishers want to get the authors on the national talk shows instead of flying the authors all over the country to try to get onto a bunch of local talk shows), and there are many more stations available to watch, so the number of people watching any particular talk show is much lower. There were also a lot more radio talk shows of a non-political nature in those days, so many more authors were able to get local radio time.

Around this time, Gordon R. Dickson told me that the key to making an interview successful (from the author's point of view) was to figure out what you wanted to say, and then answer the questions you wished the interviewer had asked you instead of answering the questions the interviewer actually asked you, until you had delivered the message you wanted to deliver. Of course, some people are better at this than others, and I mainly see this approach used these days by political talking heads on Sunday morning news shows.

Short Recommendations by Don Blyly

Ancillary Justice by Ann Leckie ($16.00) was nominated for all the major awards for science fiction and won the Hugo Award, the Nebula Award, and the Arthur C. Clarke award, among others. The sequel, Ancillary Sword ($16.00) is almost as good. In the first book, Breq looked at the empire on a macro level from both the inside and the outside. In the sequel, Breq looks at one planet that was "civilized" (i.e., conquered by the empire) hundreds of years before, finds that things are not working at all the way things should be

A Study in Silks ($7.99), A Study in Darkness ($7.99), and A Study in Ashes ($7.99) by Emma Jane Holloway is a trilogy featuring Evelina Cooper, Sherlock Holmes’ niece in an alternate Victorian England. Evelina can work magic, which can get you killed or sent to a concentration camp in this England. The Steam Barons have divided up London and apparently the empire as well, and nobody has the power to challenge them. Sherlock Holmes makes appearances in all three books, and we also occasionally encounter Dr. Watson, Mycroft Holmes (in the second book), and Professor Moriarty (in the third book). But the story mainly involves Evelina, plus some air pirates in dirigibles.

There are some romance scenes early in the first book that made me grind my teeth, as some of the very bright young women in the book lost all their intelligence any time a prospective suitor walked into the room, but by later in the first book they became capable of being intelligent even in mixed company. Evelina joins the rebel forces trying to defeat the Steam Barons and return control of the country and empire to Queen Victoria, and the action and the plot kept me reading even through a few slow spots.

There are times when I look at the new release shelf and don’t see anything I’m eager to read. It used to be that I’d then pick up an old James White book. Although he didn’t win awards, he could be depended on to tell a very good science fiction story, and while most of the novels are set in the same universe, they are independent novels that can be read in any order. But eventually I had read almost all of them, and started having trouble figuring out quickly which ones I had already read.

Eric Brown is starting to be my substitute for James White. I’ve enjoyed everything I’ve read by him, and so far each has been independent enough to be read on its own. The latest I picked up was Jani and the Greater Game ($7.99). It is set in India in an alternate 1920s. The British have put out a story that they have discovered a deposit of a miraculous new mineral in Nepal that is allowing them to make great technological advances, and they are keeping everybody out of Nepal. The Germans, the Russians, and the Chinese are sending in agents to try to find out what is really going on and to steal whatever secrets they can. Actually, a huge alien ship with two aliens aboard has arrived in Nepal, and the British are busy looting the ship for new technology. Miss Janisha Chatterjee, the daughter of a high Indian official, has been studying in London to become a doctor, but catches a dirigible back to India when she learns of her father's serious illness. She immediately gets caught up in the international espionage, some unpleasant elements of British imperialism, and the Indian independence movement. The story stays interesting and fast paced to the end.

I've been trying to get caught up with some of the series I've been following. The Last President by John Barnes ($7.99) does a fine job of concluding the near-future post-apocalyptic trilogy (set primarily in the U.S.) that began with Directive 51 ($7.99) and Daybreak Zero ($7.99). And Emperor of Thorns by Mark Lawrence ($7.99) does a fine job of concluding the far-future post-apocalyptic trilogy (set primarily in a feudal Europe 1000 years after a world-wide nuclear war) that began with Prince of Thorns ($7.99) and King of Thorns ($7.99).

Possession by Kat Richardson ($7.99) is the eighth volume in her Greywalker urban fantasy series set primarily in the Seattle area, and it's still one of my favorite urban fantasy series. The earlier books are Greywalker ($7.99), Poltergeist ($7.99), Underground ($7.99), Vanished ($7.99), Labyrinth ($7.99), Downpour ($7.99), and Seawitch ($7.99), and they should be read in order.

I also read and enjoyed Red Planet Blues by Robert J. Sawyer ($7.99), a noir private eye novel set on Mars. Lots of desperate people spent everything they could raise to get Mars to try to strike it rich prospecting for Martian fossils, but few succeeded, and the others are desperate for any way to make a dishonest living.

Waters, M.D.	Prototype (Emma #2: Emma looks forward to the day when she can stop running - from both her pasts. But when Declan Burke decides he wants his wife back, there's nowhere on the planet she can hide. Only her ex Noah Tucker could help her, but he's the person Emma most dreads confronting. Determined to reveal the truth, Emma could wind up dead - or worse, reborn). $7.99
Weber, David	Like a Mighty Army (Safehold #7: The island empire of Charis has drawn more countries to the cause of independence from Church control, but at a heavy cost in bloodshed - a cost felt keenly by Merlyn. Now the Church is regrouping; with its vast armies and resources, the fight for humanity's future won't be over soon). $8.99
Wright, John C.	The Judge of Ages (Montrose #3: 10515 CE: In their final showdown, self-appointed Master of the World Ximen del Azarchel squares off against posthuman Menelaus Montrose. Leading the assault is Marine Lt. Promise Paen, who is in no way happy to be back on her birthworld). $25.99
Black, Holly	The Darkest Part of the Forest (YA; Humans and fae exist side by side in Fairfold, the faeries' seemingly harmless magic attracting tourists. But Hazel knows how dangerous they can be, and how to stop them. Or she did, once. There is a glass coffin in the woods. In it sleeps a boy with horns on his head. Until one day he wakes up. As the world turns upside down and a hero is needed to save them all, Hazel tries to remember her years spent pretending to be a knight)... $18.00
Buckell, Tobias S.	Crystal Rain (Xenowealth #1: Reissue; Legends say that the forefathers of Nanagada fled a far-off star to their new home. But then the Azteca, created and driven by cruel gods, swarmed out of the sky in search of sacrificial blood, and worse. To defeat them and their gods, the forefathers burned the sky. In the centuries since, the Azteca have kept an uneasy truce. But now it has been broken. Only one man can stop their bloodthirsty march: John deBrun, who holds the key to an ancient secret - if he can stay alive long enough to uncover his lost memories). $15.99
Carey, Peter	Amnesia (When Gaby Baillieux released the Angel Worm virus into Australia's prison system, hundreds of asylum seekers walked free. And because the US runs the prisons - as they do so many parts of her country - the doors of several thousand jails in the US also opened. Was this a mistake, or a declaration of cyber war?). $25.95
Egan, Greg	Diaspora (Reissue; Humanity has reconfigured itself drastically. Most choose immortality as conscious software in the polises, but some opt for renewable robotic bodies. And there are holdouts, fleshers left behind in the muck and jungle of Earth. Then a disaster ravages the fleshers and reveals the possibility that the polises themselves might be at risk from bizarre astrophysical processes. Yatima, a digital being grown from a mind seed, joins a group of citizens and flesher refugees in search of the knowledge that will guarantee their safety). $15.99
Egan, Greg	Distress (Reissue; Sent to cover a scientific conference, wired journalist Andrew Worth finds himself dragged into a maelstrom of plotting, assassination attempts, and rebellion. The world's only hope for survival lies in physicist Violet Mosala's development of a final Theory of Everything, but whether it will lead to the total destruction of life as we know it or the complete remaking of the universe may be a risk too dangerous to take). $15.99
