Parking

Metered parking (25 cents for 20 minutes) is available in front of the store. Meters are enforced 8am-6pm Monday through Saturday (except for federal holidays). Note the number on the pole you park by, and pay at the box located between the dental office driveway and Popeyes driveway. The box accepts quarters, dollar coins, and credit cards, and prints a receipt that shows the expiration time. Meter parking for vehicles with Disability License Plates or a Disability Certificate is free. (Rates and hours shown are subject to change without notice - the meters are run by the city, not by us.)

Free parking is also available in the dental office lot from 5pm-8pm Monday through Thursday, and all day Friday, Saturday, and Sunday.

Holiday Schedule

Thursday, November 23: Closed
Monday, December 25: Closed
Monday, January 1: Closed

Autographing Events (at Uncle Hugo's)

Saturday, December 9, 1-2 pm Lois McMaster Bujold - Penric's Mission

Neogenesis by Sharon Lee and Steve Miller ($25.00) is the next book in the Liaden Universe series, and has an official release date of January 2. We have arranged to get signed copies from the authors, and if you order by December 10 you can get your copy personalized if you wish. After December 10, you'll only be able to get signed copies, while they last. (Sorry, no in-store autographing event)

Sales

The 37th Anniversary Sale runs Friday, November 24, through Sunday, December 3, giving you two weekends to take advantage of the sale. December 1 marks Uncle Edgar's 37th anniversary. Come into Uncle Edgar's or Uncle Hugo's and save 10% off everything except discount cards, gift certificates, or merchandise that is already marked 40% off. A discount card will save you even more - you'll get both 10% savings from the discount card and 10% off from the sale. (Sale prices apply to in-store purchases, but not to mail, phone, or website orders.)

On Small Business Saturday, November 25, our store T-shirts, sweatshirts, and bookbags are half price. (And get Anniversary Sale savings while you shop!)

Our annual Inventory Reduction Sale will be December 26-31, and will feature deep discounts on things we really, really want to get rid of. It will not be a storewide sale like the Anniversary Sale.

Redondo, and A Climate of Fear by Fred Vargas ($16.00).

The Ian Fleming Steel Dagger for Best Thriller went to Spook Street by Mick Herron ($26.95, $15.95 trade pb due mid-December). The other finalists were You Will Know Me by Megan Abbott ($15.99), The Killing Game by J. S. Carol, We Go Around in the Night and Are Consumed by Fire by Jules Grant, Redemption Road by John Hart ($16.99), and The Constant Soldier by William Ryan.

The John Creasey New Blood Dagger for Best First Crime Novel went to Tall Oaks by Chris Whitaker. The other finalists were The Pictures by Guy Bolton ($24.99), Ragdoll by Daniel Cole ($15.99), Distress Signals by Catherine Ryan Howard, Sirens by Joseph Knox, and Good Me, Bad Me by Ali Land ($25.95).

The Historical Dagger for Best Historical Crime Novel went to A Rising Man by Abir Mukherjee ($25.95). The other finalists were The Devil's Feast by M. J. Carter ($26.00), The Ashes of Berlin by Luke McCallin, The Long Drop by Denise Mina ($15.99), By Gaslight by Steven Price ($18.00), and The City in Darkness by Michael Russell ($13.99).

Holiday Gift Ideas

Our most popular gift option continues to be our gift certificate. We can issue one for any amount. It can be used at either or both Uncles.

It can even be used for mail orders, and it can be purchased over the phone (with a credit card), and we can mail it to the purchaser or to the recipient, or we can just enter the balance on a credit file here in the store to avoid the risk of the gift certificate being lost.

Calendars used to be a very popular gift item, but so many people are now using assorted electrical devices in place of a wall calendar that the calendar market has shrunk quite a bit. Last year we didn't carry any calendars. This year we brought in small numbers of a few calendars from England, and have already sold out of a couple of designs. We still have copies of Arthur Rackham ($15.99), Cthulhu ($15.99), The Sci-Fi Art of Virgil Finlay ($15.99, black and white illustrations from the pulps), and Unicorns ($15.99). We've also special ordered calendars for some customers.

We also have lots of art books, and humor books, including many that can be given to people who don't read sf or mysteries. And of course we have hundreds of signed books.

We still have a bunch of signed copies of Provenance by Ann Leckie ($26.00), that she signed at Uncle Hugo's on October 2. We are almost out of copies of The River Bank by Kij Johnson ($24.00), that she signed at Uncle Hugo's on October 14. We are out of signed copies of Vallista by Steven Brust ($25.99), that he signed on October 28, and the publisher is also out of copies. We are trying to get more copies from one of the wholesalers before they run out of copies, and if we can get more copies we'll try to get Steven to drop by and sign them.

We've recently been receiving a lot of signed books from publishers. At Uncle Hugo's, these have included River's Edge by James P. Blaylock ($40.00 limited edition), Children of the Fleet by Orson Scott Card ($25.99), Future Home of the Living God by Louise Erdrich ($28.99), It Devours! by Joseph Fink & Jeffrey Cranor ($21.99, second Welcome to Night Vale novel, and we still have signed copies of Welcome to Night Vale ($19.99), the first of the series), Strange Weather by Joe Hill ($27.99), Hiddensee: A Tale of the Once and Future Nutcracker by Gregory Maguire ($26.99), and The Ship of the Dead: Magnus Chase and the Gods of Asgard III by Rick Riordan ($19.99). We also received a couple of cases of signed copies of Oathbringer by Brandon Sanderson ($34.99) with the cases beat to hell by UPS, so we ended up with two good copies (long gone), some slightly beat up copies (almost gone) and four really beat up copies. We'll see if we can get more good copies, but we're not optimistic.

At Uncle Edgar's we've recently received signed copies of The Midnight Line by Lee Child ($28.99, the new Jack Reacher title, with all bumped a bit and some really beat up), Two Kinds of Truth by Michael Connelly ($29.00), Earthly Remains by Donn Leon ($25.00), Fallout by Sara Paretsky ($27.99), Deep Freeze by John Sandford ($29.00, Virgil Flowers novel), The House of Unexpected Sisters by Alexander McCall Smith ($25.95, No. 1 Ladies Detective Agency series) and In This Grave by Jacqueline Winspear ($27.99). David Housewright stopped by and signed What the Dead Leave Behind ($25.99) and William Kent Krueger stopped by and signed Sulfur Springs ($26.00).

How's Business by Don Blyly

The U.S. Census Bureau reported that bookstore sales tumbled 10.9% in August and are down 2.5% for the first 8 months of the year. Our sales are also down a bit for the year, but more of our sales are for used books, which have a higher profit margin than new books, so we're still hanging in there, unlike some other bookstores.

The Seattle Mystery Bookstore announced on September 18 that they were going out of business on September 30.

Book World, a 45 store chain based in Wisconsin, just announced that they are closing down the entire chain over the next 10 weeks. They have some downtown stores in various small towns around the upper Midwest, and they have some shopping mall stores. As people have shifted their purchasing away from department stores to e-commerce sites, the shopping malls have lost their anchor tenants, and once that happened the foot traffic in the malls spiraled down, and the book sales in the malls plummeted over the last 12 months, while the rent remains high. The downtown stores have continued to do well, but for some reason the chain decided to close all their stores. Book World had been the fourth largest surviving bookstore chain in the U.S.

Last year 786,935 ISBNs (International Standard Book Number) were issued for self-published books (and some of the self-published authors are so clueless that they put out their books without ISBNs, so that wholesalers and most retailers won't touch them because the computers don't know how to handle a book without an ISBN).

At Uncle Edgar's, the stock of used books has actually gone down a little, but at Uncle Hugo's we are buried in used books. It's getting hard to find books on the bottom shelves because there are such tall piles of used books in front of the shelves, and we have many more collectible used mass market books than we've ever seen before. Blame it on baby boomers downsizing their libraries. If your budget is strained by the price of new books, remember that we have thousands of very good books, with many of them only costing $4.00 each.

We are going through what has become one of my least liked parts of the year-health insurance renewal. We received the annual letters telling us that the policy we were part of this year would not be renewed for next year, but the insurance company would try to put us into the new policy that came the closest to our old policy. At the end of October, the agent called to ask if we wanted to renew our policy. I told her that we would love to renew the policy we had this year, but we had been notified that the same policy was not available for the new year. "Oh, you know about that already?" she said. "Well I have a new policy for you that's even better than the old policy. Do you want to sign up for the new policy?" "Not without finding out what it covers and what it costs." "Okay, I'll e-mail the policy summaries and the quotes to you."

The new "better" policy she wanted me to agree to without looking at it would have increased the co-pay for a doctor's visit by $30 per visit, and would have increased the cost of the policy by almost $200 per person per month. Elizabeth and I did a lot of research on-line and came up with two other policies that we could have lived with, with one being much more to our liking, and then I requested that the agent give us quotes for both of the other policies. She gave us a quote on one of the policies (the one we thought would be best for our needs) and it was slightly better and significantly less expensive than the "better" policy she wanted us to agree to. We are now going through all the paperwork to switch coverage to the new plan. (And this year was less of a hassle than last year, which was a real nightmare.)

I've been going through this annual headache for decades and just assumed that this was the way things had to be done. Then I turned 65 and was able to sign up for Medicare, and life has been so much easier for me. But I still have to go through the annual headache for the policy for the employees. I remember back when Obamacare was in the planning stages, there were a few people in Congress that wanted to allow people the option to pay a fee and join the Medicare program as a form of competition to the insurance companies, but Congress-critters of both parties quickly killed that idea, demonstrating the campaign contributions from insurance companies work

After my comments last issue about the research I had done on the book distribution network while I was working on a Ph. D., some customers asked if I had completed the Ph. D. No, I didn't, but some people might be interested in the circumstances that led to my dropping out of the program. The Dean of the University of Minnesota Business School at the time felt that one of his most important tasks was to raise the national ranking of the school.

The only people who get to vote on the ranking of the business schools are college professors at business schools. While the professors might be honest about their opinions about a lot of schools, they have a tendency to highly rate two schools in particular to advance their own careers: the school where they currently teach and the school where they received their Ph. D.

The Dean decided that this meant that every spot in the Ph. D. program that was taken by a student likely to go into the business world instead of going into academia constituted a wasted opportunity to turn out a future vote for the U of M business school, so he sent out an order to purge the Ph. D. program of anybody likely to go into the business world.

I was one of the people to be purged. They waited until my advisor was out of the country on sabbatical, so that he couldn't interfere. They took a look at the student ratings of my teaching for my first semester of teaching undergraduates, and told me that it was unsatisfactory, and that I would not be offered employment next year, either for teaching or for doing the research that I had been doing prior to my first semester of teaching. They had just given another Ph. D. student an award for being the best instructor in the entire program, and I managed to get a look at that student's ratings from his first semester of teaching, and it was almost identical to mine. Back when I was at the University of Illinois I had received the highest ranking of any instructor at the Champaign-Urbana campus for my last year there. So, it would have been easy to figure out what was going on even if I hadn't already heard about the purge going on.

I managed to keep myself busy without being in the program. A lot of space had just opened up in the building where Uncle Hugo's was then located. The first month after dropping out of school, I knocked out a wall and doubled the size on Uncle Hugo's. The next month, the American Booksellers Association held a workshop in Chicago on organizing regional bookseller organizations. I was the only one from Minnesota to attend, and as soon as I got back to town I started working on creating the Upper Midwest Booksellers Association to represent all independent bookstores in Minnesota, Iowa, North and South Dakota, and western Wisconsin (mainly with help from the sales representatives from the major publishers, because many of the other booksellers felt more comfortable about working with them instead of working with competitors). After a couple on months of that, I took over another space in the building where Uncle Hugo's was then located and started building bookshelves for Uncle Edgar's Mystery Bookstore.

About 2 or 3 years later, something interesting happened with the business school. An alumni (who only got a bachelor's degree, not a Ph. D.) gave the school a huge amount of money (I think $50 million to $100 million, but I don't remember the exact amount) and got the school named after himself. Suddenly, the school decided that having alumni going into business instead of academia was not such a bad thing. The Dean was replaced. Most of the faculty that had given me a hard time were soon gone. My advisor received an endowed chair in entrepreneurship. I probably could have gotten back into the program, but by then I was too busy and about to get married, so I didn't try.

Looking over the forthcoming book listings, it's amazing to me how many publishers decided to dramatically cut back on the number of titles released during the month of December. Since December is the month with the most foot traffic in bookstores, you'd think they'd want to have a lot of new titles for the customers to look over, but instead a lot of titles got pushed back to February, which probably has the least amount of foot traffic in the year. Decades ago, the publishers had large numbers of sales representatives that actually visited the bookstores and sent comments back to New York about what the bookstores had to say about things. There are now very few sales reps that visit stores, and the communication between bookstores and publishers has suffered as a result. I remember in the 1980s and 1990s telling many sales reps that the publishers should try to get as many of the January titles into the stores before the first week of January because we saw so many customers with gift certificates for the first couple of weeks after Christmas, looking for something new to spend their loot on. And for several years most publishers that had been shipping their January titles to arrive around the middle of January (because nobody goes out to shop in January, so it doesn't matter when we ship stuff) did in fact try to get the January titles into the stores between Christmas and the first week of January. This benefited the customers with gift certificates, the bookstores, the publishers, and the authors with books released in January. But over the years, the timing of book releases has drifted back to patterns that don't make sense to me.

I've heard that the art departments of the major publishers have become very concerned about making their book covers look like they are NOT self-published books. The theory is that enough people have now been burned by picking up bad self-published books that if the cover looks professional, the customer will assume that the book has been professionally edited and proof-read, and the customer will then be more willing to spend their money on the book. I have seen a few self-published books that have good covers, but most of them do look rather bad. I have also read at least a bit of some very bad self-published books, as well as a few good ones. But I've also read some books from the major publishers that were obviously "proof-read by spell checker," and a few that didn't even receive a spell checker proof-reading. I have no objection to the publishers spending a little more on their covers, but I wish they would also pay more attention to proof-reading. But the customers don't find out about the bad proof-reading until after they have spent their money.

Traffic on Chicago Avenue continues to be a problem, especially during rush hours, because of the bridges being rebuilt on Portland Avenue and Cedar Avenue over the Greenway, the closing of the Franklin Street bridge over I-35W, the periodic closing of Portland Avenue over I-94, and sometimes road construction issues on I-35W. The Franklin Street bridge will be out for at least another year, and the I-35W construction will move from phase to phase over the next four years, but the rest of the problems should be resolved within the next few weeks. We are really looking forward to the traffic returning to normal levels, so that people can get to and from the Uncles easily.

The Superbowl hype continues. During the same news program on the same station, I'll hear one report claiming that over 100,000 people will be in town for the Superbowl, followed by another report that claims over 1,000,000 people will be coming to town for the Superbowl, followed by another report that "hundreds of thousands of out-of-staters" will be coming to town for the Superbowl (so they should all be aware of all the street closings in downtown Minneapolis for 10 days for the Superbowl). It sure is a good thing those "hundreds of thousands of out-of-staters" are watching the Minneapolis local news reports months in advance to find out about street closings. And now the transit drivers are threatening to strike during the Superbowl. When I moved to Minneapolis, I used to spend a lot of time downtown, but over the decades all the businesses that appealed to me went out of business, and I rarely go downtown any more. And every time I drive through it, I'm amazed by how much new construction has taken place since the last time I drove through. But I really hope that I don't have to go through downtown during the 10 days of Superbowl madness. We don't expect to see a huge amount of action at the Uncles from the Superbowl, whether it brings 100,000 people or 1,000,000 people to town. A few of the fans might be interested in science fiction or mystery books, but most of them won't be interested. The Midtown Sheraton across the street from the Uncles will probably be packed with football fans (making it difficult for families of people in the hospital to find a place to stay), and some of them will probably wander across the street and look around. The Global Marketplace in the former Sears building is planning to try to draw in some of the Superbowl crowd, and if they are successful I expect that some of the football fans will wander across the street to the Uncles. Many of the ethnic food places in the Global Marketplace have high hopes of getting catering contracts for Superbowl parties. As a result, the Global Marketplace people are much more excited about the Superbowl than are the other businesses near the Uncles.

Ecko has been the store dog for almost 2 years now, but she hasn't been coming to the store quite so often lately. She has some kind of allergy that makes her very itchy. When it first developed around August, 2016, the vet said it was probably ragweed allergy, because a lot of dogs have that and it was the right time of the year for it. Ecko took some medicine for a while and the rash went away. Last winter, the allergy came back, and since there was no ragweed around, the vet decided that she had probably developed an allergy to chicken, because most dog food has chicken as a component. Ecko took more medicine and started eating salmon kibble

(at about 4 times the cost of kibble containing chicken) and the rash went away. In August, the rash came back, the vet said ragweed allergy again and Ecko started taking medicine again. The rash went away for a while, but after the frost had killed the ragweed, the rash came back. A different vet said that it was not a food allergy, because a food allergy would produce runny nose and runny ears as well as the rash. She wasn't sure what was causing the problem, but Ecko is on meds again, and the rash is slowly going away. When Ecko is at home, she mainly sleeps and thus is not aware of the rash. When Ecko is at the store, she is busy greeting customers, almost never sleeps, and is quite aware of the rash, resulting in lots of scratching. Ecko loves being at the store and greeting customers, but I've been cutting back on her trips to the store to reduce her scratching.

Short Recommendations by Don Blyly

When I started hearing good things about The Martian by Andy Weir ($15.00), back before the movie came out, I was reluctant to try it because it was getting such good reviews outside the science fiction field, and the standards for what is "good" are often different outside the field versus inside the field. But eventually, I tried it, and I loved it, and it stayed on our Recommended Science Fiction display until the publisher killed off the mass market edition. I still recommend it often to people who are interested in engineering science fiction. Andy Weir's new book, Artemis ($27.00, due mid-November), is even better. Set on the only city on the moon, it is told from the point of view of Jasmine "Jazz" Bashara, who was brought to the moon from Saudi Arabia at the age of 6. Her father is a master welder, and she is very bright and could probably succeed at anything she set her mind to. But at 16 she went into a fierce state of teen rebellion and moved out, and that's still her attitude 10 years later. Officially, she picks up shipments at the port and delivers them to the people or companies that they are addressed to. Unofficially, she went into business with an former school pen pal on Earth. He got a job as a load specialist at the spaceport in Kenya, and together the two of them handle all the smuggling to the moon. A very rich smuggling customer (a case of expensive cigars per month, among other things) offers her a huge amount of money if she can figure out how to sabotage a moon company that he wants to buy out. She puts her engineering skills to work, along with her knowledge of the various safety systems in Artemis, and her friendships with various other residents with high-tech skills, and plans how she's going to sabotage the company. But she wasn't aware that the company was secretly owned by a Brazilian mob, and things become dangerously complicated. Publishers Weekly gave Artemis a starred review, but in the mystery/thriller category rather than the science fiction category, and it works very well in both categories.

I've enjoyed Walter Jon Walters novels for decades, but he is primarily known for his science fiction novels. Quillifer ($27.99) is the first of a fantasy series. Set in a fantasy world at about the level of the early Renaissance, the story is told from the point of view of Quillifer, the well-educated and highly ambitious son of a butcher. He is often the brightest person in any given room, and he uses his smart mouth to point this out to everybody, which is not looked upon with favor by the aristocracy. He is quite a womanizer, and he'd rather use clever schemes than hard work to achieve his goals. And he has an angry goddess plotting revenge against him. The book is enormous fun, and I particularly enjoyed Walters' use of language in this book. Walters says he has the first six books plotted, and has a contract for the first three books, and I'm looking forward to reading many more of Quillifer's adventures. After all the grimness of George R. R. Martin's series and all of Joe Abercrombie's books (which I also enjoy), it's a pleasure to read such a humorous fantasy.

A customer complained that he thought Grand Central Arena by Ryk E. Spoor ($7.99) should be on our recommended science fiction display. I tried it, and now that book plus the sequel, Spheres of Influence ($7.99), are on the recommended sf display. I haven't yet read the third book of the trilogy, Challenges of the Deeps ($16.00), but it's high on my list to read. At the beginning of Grand Central Arena, humans have settled most of the Solar system, have wiped out most physical wants, and most humans have an artificial intelligence installed in their brain to help them get information quickly and process it. But lack of a faster than light drive has kept them stuck in the Solar system-until Dr. Simon Sandrisson invents a FTL drive. He has sent out some probes, and some have returned with interesting data and some have not returned. He assembles a crew for the first human ship, and he chooses Ariane Austin, a top spaceship racing pilot, to pilot the new ship. When the drive is turned on, every AI system on the ship crashes and Ariane's reflexes and training barely save them from disaster. It seems that in the far distant past (perhaps a billion years ago) some race arranged things so that any race that discovers a FTL drive would end up in this artificial universe, thus keeping them from invading other star systems. There are now 5000 alien races living in the Arena, and they all have to play by the rules created by the mysterious creator of this universe. The humans are the first new race to enter the Arena in thousands of years, and they gradually learn the rules, make allies and enemies, and do fairly well. The Arena decides that Ariane is the Leader of the Faction of Humanity because she led the small crew of her ship to the success they have enjoyed so far. She eventually realizes that the Arena considers her to be the leader on all of humanity, not just the small crew in the Arena. At the end of the first book, she leads part of the crew back to the Solar system to brief the government on what has happened and to lead more humans to the Arena. The politicians don't understand how the Arena works, but they are not happy with a racing pilot as the leader of all of humanity, and some plan to change that. Spheres of Influence has lots of fast-paced action as Ariane and her crew deal with plots against the humans and among the humans, both in the Arena and in the Solar system. Very enjoyable space opera.

Because I enjoyed Spoor's space operas so much, I also tried Phoenix Rising ($7.99), the beginning of a fantasy series. It was also very good. In a world with humans, elves (by a different name), dwarves (by a different name), an intelligent saurian race that lives thousands of years, active gods of light and demons of darkness, and lots of other interesting critters good and bad, my favorite character was Poplock Duckweed, an adventurous little toad that plays a major role in the book, while the other toads are too lazy to play a role in such dangerous events. Every couple of thousand years another chaoswar breaks out, with civilizations being crushed as the forces of good and evil battle for control of the world, and at the beginning of the book it is almost time for the next chaoswar to break out. The forces of evil have been plotting for a long time to win it all this time. But there are also forces of good that have been recruiting and training agents of good (including five from our world) and trying to get them into place to thwart the bad guys. The series continues with Phoenix in Shadow (not currently in print) and Phoenix Ascendant ($16.00).

Spoor has also co-written several science fiction books with Eric Flint, none of which I've read yet: Boundary ($7.99), Portal ($7.99), Threshold ($7.99), Castaway Planet ($7.99), and Castaway Odyssey ($7.99). I've heard particularly good things about the Castaway novels and will try to find time to read those soon.

I made the mistake of picking up Children of the Divide by Patrick S. Tomlinson ($7.99) without realizing that it was the third book of a series, and I had not read the previous books, Ark ($7.99) and Trident's Forge ($7.99). Ark tells the story of a generation ship of 30,000 people fleeing a dying earth, and a murder mystery that takes place on the ship. Trident's Forge tells the story of the generation ship finding a habitable planet, but it already has an intelligent race, and the struggle to get the two cultures to work together. Children of the Divide starts 18 years after the generation ship reached the colony planet Gaia, and the new generation of both the humans and the aliens are coming of age. There is a lot of trust between some of the humans and some of the aliens, but not by all of either race. When a very advanced alien installation (far too advanced to have been left there by the natives of Gaia) is found on the moon (which is worshiped as a god by the natives), all sorts of fractures appear in the understandings between the races. Add in a terrorist attack (launched by a conspiracy of both humans and natives) and the kidnapping of the human chief of police's daughter (actually an alien child raised as a human, while elsewhere a human child was raised as an alien), and I was too hooked on this story to go back to the earlier books—and it worked just fine that way. But I suggest that others read the books in the proper order.

Kevin Hearne is primarily known for his Iron Druid series, beginning with Hounded ($7.99). This delightful series of humorous contemporary fantasies is up to eight paperbacks, one hardcover from a major publisher, and a couple of short hardcovers from a small press, featuring Atticus O'Sullivan, a 2000 year old druid, and his Irish wolf hound Oberon (with whom he has a telepathic link). Kevin decided that he wanted to try his hand at big, fat, heroic fantasy novels, with A Plague of Giants ($28.99) being the first of the series. This series has many more characters to keep track of, many more subplots to follow, and is much darker than the Iron Druid series. The continent where the story takes place (at least for the first book) has six nations, each with a distinctive culture and its own kind of magic-users. Then the continent is invaded by armies of Bone Giants, who slaughter everybody in their path, and nobody can figure out where they came from or what their motivation is. Much of the story is told by a magic-using bard, who has been sent (for reasons that are not clear by the end of the first book) to share the story of the war with another nation and the many refugees that have fled there. He uses his magic to have his voice reach all the people gathered for his daily story sessions, and he makes himself appear to be the person whose story he is telling. At first, I felt overwhelmed by the sheer number of characters and plots I was supposed to keep track of, and didn't see how they all fit together, but around the halfway point in the book I started to enjoy it (in spite of the fact that it had only one funny scene in the entire book). By the end of the book, I had fit all the pieces together and was eager for the next book.

For years I've been hearing good things about the urban fantasies of Justin Gustainis, and I finally found time to read some. I started with Occult Crimes Unit series, Hard Spell, Evil Spell, and Known Devil, about a police unit in Scranton, Pennsylvania that deals with supernatural crimes. The series is very good, and it's also out of print, so you'll have to look for it used. We don't see them come in used very often, and they disappear very quickly when they do come in. I then read his earlier Morris and Chastain Supernatural Investigations series, Black Magic Woman ($7.99), Evil Ways ($7.99), and Sympathy for the Devil ($7.99). Quincey Morris is a "consultant" from Texas (because it would involve too much red tape from the state to be able to call himself a private investigator) who helps people with supernatural problems. He has a network of contacts all over the country who help him with various cases. One of the people he calls on most often is Libby Chastain, a white witch from New York City. Lot of fast action, interesting plot twists, and fun character interactions. Each book comes to a satisfactory ending, but some plot elements carry over from book to book, and the character relationships advance from book to book, so this series should be read in order.

I enjoyed Wesley Chu's Tao series, The Lives of Tao ($7.99), The Deaths of Tao ($7.99), and The Rebirths of Tao ($7.99). Many millions of years ago, an alien starship was passing through the Solar system developed a problem and the only place the aliens could go was Earth. But they can't survive in Earth's atmosphere on their own, so they established a symbiotic relationship with Earth life forms and have been working ever since to force Earth life to evolve to the point that they can build a new starship and continue their journey. They almost have humans to the point where construction could begin when a civil war breaks out among the aliens. One group wants to just convert Earth's atmosphere to something they can breath (which will wipe out all other life on Earth), while the other group figures that after millions of years of forcing evolution, a few more centuries isn't much time to wait to make the original plan work. In the first trilogy, the brilliant alien Tao is stuck with a rather mediocre human as a symbiote, which isn't helping much with the war. The first trilogy ends with a bit of a cliff hanger. The Rise of Io ($7.99) is the first book of a second trilogy, taking place a few years after the end of the first trilogy. Io is a very low-ranking alien who has been involved in some of the worst decisions in human history, and suddenly Io becomes a symbiote of a very bright and stubborn young human refugee in Asia who has survived by being a thief, con-artist, and smuggler. The civil war is still going on, and Io isn't sure which side to be on. The early part of the book was a little slow as the author feeds information to the reader, who might not have already read the Tao series, but eventually the story gets up to speed and becomes an enjoyable addition to the series.

Palmer, Ada -- Seven Surrenders $17.99

(Terra Ignota #2: It is a world in which near-instantaneous travel is free, automation provides for basic needs, binary gender distinctions are archaic, and nationality is a fading memory. And the entire social order is teetering, because even in utopia, humans will conspire - and because something new has arisen, a child who can bring inanimate objects to conscious life.)

Palmer, Ada -- The Will to Battle $26.99

(Terra Ignota #3: Corruption, deception, and insurgency hum within the once steadfast leadership of the Hives. For decades, even centuries, the leaders of the great Hives maintained stability with a trickle of secret murders, mathematically planned, so that no faction could ever dominate. As the great secret becomes more widely known, the Hives' facade of solidarity is slipping away. Now everyone scrambles to prepare for the seemingly inevitable war.)

- Reynolds, Josh -- Plague Garden $16.00
(Warhammer: Age of Sigmar: Gardus, newly reforged and fresh from the destruction of the Scabrous Sprawl, must lead his warriors into the heart of Nurgle's realm in search of missing Lord-Castellant Lorrus Grymn.)
- Roberts, Nora -- Year One $27.99
