Parking

Metered parking (25 cents for 20 minutes) is available in front of the store. Meters are enforced 8am-6pm Monday through Saturday (except for federal holidays). Note the number on the pole you park by, and pay at the box located between the dental office driveway and Popeyes driveway. The box accepts quarters, dollar coins, and credit cards, and prints a receipt that shows the expiration time. Meter parking for vehicles with Disability License Plates or a Disability Certificate is free. (Rates and hours shown are subject to change without notice - the meters are run by the city, not by us.)

Free parking is also available in the dental office lot all day Saturday and Sunday. (New dentist, new schedule; if you park in his lot at other times, you may be towed.)

Used Book Sale

Friday, May 31 through Sunday, June 9: We're having another used book sale to try to reduce the piles of used books. All used books will be at least 20% off, whether you have a discount card or not. The sale includes used paperbacks, used hardcovers, used magazines, used gaming books, and bagged books.

Because we have so many used audiobooks, we will be selling all used audiobooks at $5.00 each, whether cassette or CD.

We used to do a fair amount of business in used true crime books, but they have been very slow for the last couple of years. We'd rather have the space for other uses, so all used true crime books will be 50% off.

We also used to do a fair amount of business in assorted men's action adventure series, but they've really slowed down and we have so many overstock copies in the basement. We will be giving 50% off the following series:

Able Team (at Edgar's)
Blade (at Hugo's)
The Butcher (at Edgar's)
Death Merchant (at Edgar's)
Depth Force (at Edgar's)
Doomsday Warrior (at Hugo's)
Endworld (at Hugo's)
The Executioner (at Edgar's)
Mack Bolan (at Edgar's)
The Mercenary (at Edgar's)
Nick Carter (at Edgar's)
Penetrator (at Edgar's)
Perry Rhodan (at Hugo's)
Phoenix Force (at Edgar's)
Richard Blade (at Hugo's)
Seventh Carrier (at Hugo's)
Stony Man (at Edgar's)
TNT (at Edgar's)
WWIII (at Hugo's)

This sale will be for customers shopping in the store-it does not apply to mail orders. If you are thinking about bringing in lots of used books to sell during the sale, expect a longer than normal wait. And don't bother to drag along your used true crime books.

How's Business? by Don Blyly

The assorted reports I've been reading suggest that national book sales so far this year are probably down around 8% in units and around 3-4% in dollars (because the price of books have been going up). Some of those reports include college bookstores (where sales of text books are way down due to increased text book rentals and increased use of computer data packs rather than bound books) and Christian bookstores (which have been going out of business at a rapid rate for the last few years) and some of the reports don't include college bookstores or Christian bookstores. At the Uncles, our sales have been down around 5% so far this year in dollars, and it would take a lot of work to try to figure out how much we are down in units.

Receiving damaged books from the publishers is always a pain, but we've recently seen a significant increase in the number of damaged books received in undamaged boxes. This can be caused by 2 things: (1) books that were already damaged before they were put into the box and (2) a really bad job of packing the box. If we receive five copies of a title and one of them is damaged, we've become (unfortunately) used to that, But when we receive five copies of a title and every copy is significantly damaged we have to delay filling mail orders, order more copies, and hope that the next shipment is less damaged.

I find that a lot of the dreams that I remember after I wake up revolve around two subjects that used to play a major role in the Uncle's business. I'm going to talk about why they were important and seem to appear so often in my dreams.

The Bookmen was a local book wholesaler that made being in the book business so much easier than it is now. When Uncle Hugo's started, it was too small to set up accounts directly with the publishers, so I had to rely on wholesalers. Even after we were able to set up accounts with the publishers, we still did much of our business with The Bookmen. If a new title took off much better than I had expected, it was faster and easier to pick up more copies from the Bookmen than to get up to a minimum order with a publisher, call in an order, and then wait a week or two for the books to arrive. If a publisher let me know that an author was flying into town the next day and wanted to stop by the store to sign his books, I could probably stock up at The Bookmen, while there was no chance that I could get extra copies from the publisher in time.

(Why would a publisher set up a signing tour for an author, buy the plane tickets weeks in advance, set up tv and radio appearances weeks in advance, and then wait until the day before the author reached town to let the bookstores where the author was not having a formal signing know about it? I've been asking that question for decades and never received an answer from a publisher. You'd think the publisher would let all the bookstores in the town know weeks in advance that the author was coming to town so that all the bookstores could be well stocked with the author's books when the publicity hit.)

The Bookmen also saved the day whenever a publisher screwed up shipments (like throwing 25 of the wrong title into the box) or forgetting to ship the order. Or whenever a box would fall apart on the way to the bookstore and half of the books were missing or unsaleable. As a result, I often went to The Bookmen three times per week to restock books, to see if anything had arrived at The Bookmen that I had on order from the publishers but not yet received my shipment, and to just wander around the warehouse looking for interesting titles published by companies that I didn't have an account with. And I discovered and bought a lot of books because I was able to wander around and look at them.

The Bookmen was the only major book wholesaler in the country that allowed booksellers and librarians to wander through the warehouse and look at the books. They also threw an annual party in December in the warehouse that was open not only to the local bookstore people and librarians but also others involved in the book industry (local authors, people who escorted out-of-town authors on tour, agents, etc.) and their families.

It's not surprising that I often have dreams that take place at The Bookmen, as much time as I spent there. Often in a dream, a problem would arise affecting the bookstore, and I'd head off to The Bookmen to try to fix the problem. And then I'd wake up, realizing that The Bookmen was no longer around to fix the problem.

The closing of The Bookmen had a much larger impact on the Uncles than I had expected. Because The Bookmen allowed librarians to walk through the warehouse and inspect the books, all of the local library systems allowed each branch to have it's own budget for buying books to suit the needs and tastes of the regular users of each branch. Many of those librarians used part of their budget to buy books at the Uncles at a special library discount. They told us that the books we recommended to them were much more popular than the science fiction, fantasy, and mystery books purchased for them by the central administration. Because the librarians often came as groups of 2 or 3 at a time, we had to keep good stocks of the titles we recommended most often. If we strongly recommended a title or a series to one of the librarians, chances were that all of the librarians would want a copy for their branch. For many years we averaged between $1000 and $2000 per month in library sales, although the special library discount meant that we didn't make as much profit as we would if regular customers spent that kind of money. And we moved a lot of great books into the library systems. But after The Bookmen closed, all the central administrations wiped out the budgets for all the branch libraries, doing centralized buying for all the branches. Our library sales dropped to zero, and the volume of books we sold also went down. Over time, we also had to cut back on the number of copies per title that we stocked of our favorite books.

I also often have dreams that take place at science fiction conventions. I started attending science fiction conventions in 1968, when I came up to Minneapolis from Illinois for Minicon 2, and started selling books at conventions shortly after Uncle Hugo's opened in March, 1974. For decades Uncle Hugo's sold at conventions around the Midwest and at some world science fiction conventions. In the early years, Uncle Hugo's would close during Minicon because the books were more likely to sell at the convention than at the store, partly because most of our customers were spending the weekend at the convention. After a few years our customer base increased enough beyond the convention crowd that we kept the store open during Minicon (partly because of all the out-of-towners who wanted to visit the store to go through our used book collection).

Before Amazon became a major factor, many convention attendees viewed conventions as an opportunity to find books not available in the bookstores or drug stores in their home towns, and convention books sales were very good. As Amazon became more important and as national bookstore chains expanded, it became much easier to find a large selection of books without going to a convention, and it became less profitable to haul a minivan full of books across several states to sell at a convention. It got to the point that if there was only one major book dealer at the regional convention, it was profitable. If there were two major book dealers at the convention, both would have a hard time making a profit. If there were more than two major book dealers, none of them would make a profit.

Then Uncle Hugo's computerized, and everything changed. Before computerization, I'd just take books from the shelves and put them in boxes to take to the convention, and after the convention

I'd put the books back on the shelves. To re-order books, we'd walk around the store with publishers' catalogs, marking down what was on the shelves and then figure out what to order. When we computerized, we spent months building a database of what we wanted to have on the shelves and what we actually had on the shelves, and we'd push a few buttons to generate a re-order. The software had a "book fair" function, where every book that went to a convention had to be scanned into the computer before leaving the store and then scanned through the computer again when it returned to the store, so that the computer would be able to generate re-orders. If the "book fair" function had worked properly, this would have still made selling at conventions a much more time-consuming endeavor, but the "book fair" function did not work properly. We tried for a couple of conventions to enter everything we took to the convention into the "book fair" function, and then printed out a report to check by hand against what we brought back from the convention to make sure that the inventory records did not get too messed up. But eventually the combination of the computer problems and the declining business at conventions led us to stop selling at conventions.

Over the last 50+ years, the local science fiction conventions have been held at a lot of different hotels, many of which no longer exist. But a large number of the conventions were held at the former Radisson South, which has gone through a number of different owners, a number of management companies, and a number of different franchises. The hotel is currently operating under the DoubleTree franchise. Unfortunately, the current management company is very hostile to science fiction conventions, so many of the local science fiction conventions are now held at a different DoubleTree that welcomes the science fiction business. The former Radisson South is now frequently referred to in the local science fiction community as the Radish Tree, to differentiate it from the friendly DoubleTree hotel in St. Louis Park.

For those who are not familiar with the hotel, let me say that it has a lot of function space, a lot of sleeping rooms, a lot of rooms well suited for various sized parties. It is surrounded by a very large surface parking lot (but often not large enough, if a convention or trade show is drawing in lots of local people who are not taking sleeping rooms). There are a large number of places to eat at various price points within convenient walking distance, and there are nearby overflow hotels once all the Radish Tree sleeping rooms are taken. Over the decades I've attended dozens of science fiction conventions plus a number of trade shows and other events at the Radish Tree, and have a high opinion of the physical facilities (except when I can't find parking in that very large lot).

I recently had a dream where I went to a science fiction convention at a hotel like the Radish Tree, but both the hotel and the parking lot were about 10 times the size of the real Radish

Tree. This place was so large that it was hosting three different conventions at the same time, each of them with 3,000 to 5,000 attendees. I parked in the lot, walked some distance to one of the multiple entrances, and eventually found my way to the dealers room for the science fiction convention. I went through the entire dealers room and not a single dealer was selling books. I then wandered through the hotel for a while and accidentally walked into the dealers room for one of the other conventions. I walked through that room and couldn't tell the difference between the science fiction dealers room and the other convention's dealers room. At this point I was pretty disgusted and decided to head for home. I spent the next hour walking through the hotel trying to find the entrance I had come in, knowing that it would be closest to my car. After an hour I decided that any exit would do, and finally found one. Standing inside the hotel in front of the exit door was a short woman in costume with a stroller draped in black cloth so that you couldn't see what was in the stroller, and she had a pet turkey, also in costume, with a leash attached to the back of the costume. The turkey walked over to me and acted very friendly, so I offered to hold the turkey's leash while she got the stroller through the door. We all got out of the door, and then a big group of people surged past, sweeping away the short woman and her stroller. I stood there holding the turkey's leash, looking around for her for a couple of minutes. Then the turkey and I went wandering through the parking lot trying to find my car, while I tried to figure out what to do with the turkey if we ever found my car. The turkey and I were still looking for my car when the alarm went off.

Book Signings

We just had a book signing for the latest book by P. C. Hodgell, By Demons Possessed ($16.00). When we set the date for the signing, it didn't occur to me or to Pat (who lives in Wisconsin and thus has a very good excuse) that the signing was scheduled on the Minnesota fishing opener, when an estimated 500,000 people drop everything to run away to a lake to try to catch a fish. Because of the conflict, the signing was not exactly crowded, and we have plenty of copies of all the titles in this excellent fantasy series available. Pat says she isn't sure yet if she can finish off the series with one more book or if it will take two more books.

In early June we expect to be receiving a large shipment of signed copies of A Liaden Universe Constellation Volume 4 (short stories set in the Liaden universe) that Sharon Lee and Steve Miller will sign in Maine (and personalize for those who requested it) before forwarding the books on to us. If you haven't already requested a personalized copy, it's too late for you. But you can still request a signed copy.

In early August we will be receiving The Flowers of Vashnoi by Lois McMaster Bujold ($25.00), a novella in the Vorkosigan series that follows Captain Vorpatril's Alliance and features Ekaterin Vorkosigan as the main character. Lois will be signing at Uncle Hugo's on Saturday, August 10, 1-2 pm. But as soon as we receive the shipment I'll haul about half of them out to Lois' place so that she can sign them and deal with any personalization requests we've received by that time.

Also in early August we will be receiving Witchy Kingdom by D. J. Butler ($25.00), the third of the Sarah Calhoun series of alternate history fantasies. We have plenty of signed copies of the earlier books in mass market paperback, Witchy Eye ($7.99) and Witchy Winter ($7.99). We also have copies of his unrelated series of young adult books (written as Dave Butler). Dave will be signing at Uncle Hugo's on Wednesday, September 25, 5-6 pm, as well as perhaps doing a reading or playing music based on the Witchy series.

Uncle Edgar's is Hiring

Elizabeth has decided that working full time elsewhere plus all the work she has been doing at Uncle Edgar's is just too much. We are looking for a part-time person with the following skills:

- 1) Able to discuss mystery books with customers and make appropriate recommendations;
- 2) Able to lift boxes of books (for example flats of used mass market paperbacks);
- 3) Able to alphabetize accurately;
- 4) Basic computer skills;

5) Able to deal with phone calls from people asking for information about books, placing mail orders, etc.

At this point, we are looking for somebody to work Saturdays starting in late June, but more hours could be available if another employee wants some time off. Compensation include an employee discount on books. Send a resume to Don at UncleHugo@aol.com

Short Recommendations by Don Blyly

Since the last issue of the newsletter, I've done a lot of reading of older books that I missed when they first came out and relatively little reading of new books.

I've discussed here several times how much I enjoy Seanan McGuire's InCryptid series, but I had a long wait for the eighth book in the series, That Ain't Witchcraft ($7.99). So I tackled her October Daye series (which is on the current Hugo Award ballot for Best Series). October "Toby" Daye is a half-fae private eye in San Francisco, which has a large but secret fae population. Sometimes she takes cases from the human population to help pay the bills, but she mostly works for fae clients. The series consists of Rosemary and Rue ($7.99), A Local Habitation ($7.99), An Artificial Night ($7.99), Late Eclipses ($7.99), One Salt Sea ($7.99), Ashes of Honor ($7.99), Chimes at Midnight ($7.99), The Winter Long ($7.99), A Red-Rose Chain ($7.99), Once Broken Faith ($7.99), The Brightest Fell ($7.99), and Night and Silence ($26.00), and I read all of them except the new hardcover in about 2 weeks. The cases that Toby takes tend to be rather grim, giving the first couple of books a rather dark feel. In the third book her fetch, May Daye, is introduced. A fetch is a supernatural being who has all the memories of somebody who is about to die, and is supposed to guide the person to the lands of the dead. Toby and May start out with the same memories, the same attitudes, and they are both smart-asses. From the time May is introduced, there is a lot more humor in the books and I started enjoying them as much as the InCryptid series. Over the next several books, May develops her own personality, and many other characters join Toby's band of helpers. In the seventh book, Borderlands Bookstore in San Francisco gets written into the series and appears in other novels after that. The books should be read in order, even if the first two are not quite as much fun as the rest of the series.

Marshall Ryan Maresca has had nine books out in the last four years, but I hadn't tried any of them. A regular customer called my attention to him, pointing out that he was writing four parallel series all set in the same magical city but with different characters in each series, and that most of the books were "caper" novels. That sounded interesting, so I went to the used shelf and found a copy of A Murder of Mages ($7.99), the first of the Maradaine Constabulary series. I was hooked on the series after the first chapter. Satrine Rainey was a street rat on the south side of town until she was picked up as a teenager by the intelligence service, trained, and sent off on an important foreign assignment. After her assignment, she left the service, married an Inspector First Class in the constabulary, and started a family on the north side (the better side) of town. Years later, her husband was beaten severely during an investigation and is now bed-bound with damage to his brain. With no money coming in and a husband and two teenage daughters to support, Satrine walks into the constabulary house in her old neighborhood with a forged letter from the constabulary commissioner, ordering the captain to hire her as an Inspector Third Class. He does so, and makes her partner with Minox "Jinx" Welling, who comes from a family of constables for generations, but nobody else wants to partner with him. This is partly because he insists on finding who really committed a crime rather than just arresting somebody and declaring the case solved, and partly because he has some magical ability but doesn't have control over it. Satrine picks up the nickname "Tricky" even before her forgery is discovered, and soon Jinx and Tricky are after a serial killer who targets mages. I loved the book.

I then picked up the first book published about the city of Maradaine, The Thorn of Dentonhill ($8.99), which the publisher calls the first of the Maradaine series, but others call the first of the Thorn series or the first of the Batman series. Veranix Calbert is a third year student in magic at the University of Maradaine during the day, but at night he is at war with Willem Fenmere, the crime boss of Dentonhill, who murdered Veranix's father and forced an illegal drug on Veranix's mother until her mind burned out. There is a lot of fast paced action as Veranix, known as The Thorn, fights against Fenmere, his thugs, mages, hired assassins, etc., while trying to not flunk out of college.

The Thorn of Dentonhill was fun, but I just didn't find the characters as interesting as Jinx and Tricky in the constable series, so I next read An Import of Intrigue ($7.99), the second of the constabulary series. Much of this book is set in the foreign ghetto of Maradaine and introduces us to the many different cultures in the world, as well as showing us more about the families and the backgrounds of Jinx and Tricky.

I then tried the first of the Streets of Maradaine series, The Holver Alley Crew ($7.99). Somebody torched several blocks of buildings late one night for a real estate deal, wiping out many businesses, many homes, and killing many people. Among those who survived are the Rynax brothers, who were raised by their father to be con artists and thieves, but are trying to go straight. Asti Rynax served in the intelligence service until an assignment shattered his brain. Brother Verci is married with a baby, and the new shop that Asti and Verci were about to open was destroyed in the fire, as well as Verzi's home. The brothers put together a crew to go after whoever was responsible for torching their neighborhood, including other former criminals who tried to go straight, some criminals who never went straight, and some business people who were never criminals but are up for some revenge against the responsible parties. This is a wonderful caper novel, as is the sequel, Lady Henterman's Wardrobe ($7.99), which I immediately read.

I then picked up the next two books in the Thorn series, The Alchemy of Chaos ($7.99) and The Imposters of Aventil ($7.99), and enjoyed both of them more than the first book. The characters were better developed and The Thorn had put together quite a team to help him in his mission. But something changed in The Imposters of Aventil. Up to that point, there was very little overlap between the different series, so you could just jump in anywhere and enjoy one series on its own. In The Thorn of Dentonhill there is a very minor character who ends up being killed by the serial killer in A Murder of Mages, and two constables on horseback are murdered in The Thorn of Dentonhill and that murder is briefly mentioned as an unsolved case in A Murder of Mages, but it didn't matter which book you read first. But in The Imposters of Aventil Jinx and Tricky and some of Jinx's extended family play major roles, so it is a very good idea to have read the first two Constabulary novels before reading The Imposters of Aventil.

Next, I made the mistake of reading A Parliament of Bones ($7.99), the third of the Constabulary novels, without first reading The Way of the Shield ($7.99), the first of the Maradaine Elite series. The Way of the Shield shows us how corrupt the government is, how riddled with conspiracies it is, and introduces us to two of the main characters in A Parliament of Bones. There is also some crossover from the other two series into A Parliament of Bones. I've been noticing a lot of people who pick up one book in one of the series and then come back to pick up every other book by Maresca in a purchasing binge. They are all good enough to justify buying them all, but don't read the third book in any of the series until you've read the early books of all the other series.

S. M. Stirling's Theater of Spies ($17.00) is the second in the alternate history series that began with Black Chamber ($16.00). Teddy Roosevelt is President of the U.S. at the beginning of World War I instead of Woodrow Wilson, and he is ready for war. In addition to building up the military, he has also created the Black Chamber, an elite espionage organization. Since the last episode, the Germans have launched huge poison gas attacks on both London and Paris. The London attack wiped out almost all of the government and royal family. The French are fleeing Europe for North Africa as the German army marches into southern France. The Canadians have become part of the U.S. (each former province becoming a state), and the U.S. controls everything from the North Pole through Panama. Teddy sends the same two female agents from The Black Chamber on another espionage mission into Germany. There's more spying, sabotaging, another battle on a dirigible, etc. If you liked the first episode (and I did) you'll like the second episode.

I picked up the fat (almost 700 pages) advance reading copy of Upon a Burning Throne by Ashok K. Banker ($26.00), the first of an epic fantasy series based on the ancient Indian classic The Mahabharata, and I was very impressed. While the story itself was very good, I was most impressed with the author's skill at telling the story from the points of view of so many different characters without the story ever becoming confusing. And reading about a non-European culture added to my interest in the story.

Who Dunit - Short Mystery Reviews by Mary McKinley

I discovered Aaron Elkins with his Gideon Oliver, squeamish forensic anthropologist, years ago and quickly snapped up all his books. I then sampled his Chris Nordgren, art curator books and finished them fairly fast. His most recent, A Long Time Coming (TPB, $15.95) is a stand alone and rich in character. Val Caruso is an art curator who has hit a string of bad luck. His divorce is final, his promotion didn't happen, he turned 40, and his life is in a rut. Out of the blue, he's contacted by a Holocaust survivor who is trying to reclaim a pair of Renoir sketches. They were given to the family, looted by Italian Fascists, disappeared, and have finally shown up again at an auction. The survivor would like them back, and contacts Val to help. Of course, the path to recovery isn't simple. No sooner does he lay eyes on the sketches when he's savagely attacked, left for dead, and the sketches disappeared. And then it gets personal.... As always, Elkin's dialog flows like real conversation, and it's believable how "regular" people can get caught up in criminal events by being in the wrong place at the wrong time.

The Hundred-Year-Old Man Who Climbed Out of the Window and Disappeared (TPB $16.00) by Jonas Jonasson. The forward says that "Those who say only what is true, they're not worth listening to" as a way of explaining that this is a novel - or make-believe - not all true. Allan Karlsson just turned 100, and still being of quite sound mind and body, decided that the nursing home he was in didn't meet his standards. For one thing, they wanted to limit his vodka intake. So on his birthday, he climbs out of his window, steals a suitcase full of cash, and goes in search of something to do. While looking for something new, he is introduced to the world of tablets and the internet, crooks and schemes, and does his best to stay at least one or two steps ahead of the police. Karlsson has lived through history getting involved with many public figures and events including Stalin, the Manhattan Project, WWII, and President Truman. I have to admit, the Scandinavian humor is a bit off for my tastes - there was some humor in the stories, but a lot of repetition. Karlsson does pick up a motley assortment of people on his travels who both add to and distract from the story, such as it is. If you like sagas, this is a great book, which has also been made into a movie. His second book, The Accidental Further Adventures of the Hundred-Year-Old Man (TPB $15.99), is more contemporary in politics with many world leaders in for a trouncing. If you can set aside real life and look at this as an adventure - like Indiana Jones - it's a much more fun read. Don't try to make it realistic however; that's a set up for disappointment. Again, a lot of the Scandinavian humor isn't to my liking, but that's a personal taste.

Orange trees that are over two hundred years old and potentially immune to an orange killing disease. Pythons over 20 feet long and two hundred pounds. A twenty year old unsolved murder. And in the middle, Hannah Smith - fishing guide and private eye. Seduced (PB $9.99) is the fourth in the Hannah Smith series by Randy Wayne White. This intrigued me as White seems to be a popular writer with a lot of books - not always a good sign, but worth taking a chance on. This book started off a little slow - talking a lot about the psyllids that carry Citrus Greening Disease that's wiping out the orange crops worldwide and the genetics of the original orange trees planted by the Spanish and the search for said trees. But then the bodies start turning up and the story builds from there. Hannah is cynical and untrusting, especially since every time she opens her heart, the person either dies or is a murderer and no one is who they seem to be. If you're snake phobic, avoid this book. There are graphic scenes with HUGE pythons and how they've taken over the Floridian ecological niche decimating much of the native wildlife, and why you don't want to go into swamps. Since they've eaten all the other animals on their island, they are turning to cannibalism and eating anything - and I do mean anything - that ventures into their territory. Of course, reading about the mosquitoes is enough to keep me out! The previous Hannah Smith books are Gone (PB $9.99), Deceived (PB $9.99), and Haunted (PB $9.99). Based on the ability of the author to keep me on the edge of my seat in the last pages as the mystery unfolds and the pieces fall into place, I'll be reading more of this writer. My only quibble is that the author doesn't seem to have a good female voice - the character is female but it's just a bit off. Not enough to be unreadable, but enough to be noticeable. I think I'll give the Marion "Doc" Ford series a try. Based on the mosquitoes, pythons, and other assorted critters, I'm glad I live in Minnesota and am looking at over a foot of snow right now - no pythons here!

Why are the nicest people the most morbid writers? And from Minnesota? Has Minnesota Nice taken over them so they have to release in other ways? I'm speaking of David Housewright, and Dead Man's Mistress (expected May 19; HC $26.99; most likely signed). This is book #16 of his Rushmore McKenzie series and it opens with stolen paintings. The artist has since died (of natural causes), making his paintings all that more valuable, and his (in)famous model claims to own three more that haven't been seen by anyone and which are now missing, presumed stolen. The story is set primarily in the Grand Marais area, and many of the landmarks are familiar ones - the Great! Lakes Candy Kitchen (yummm) on the way up, the Angry Trout, the many galleries - a lot of my favorite places. McKenzie is a retired St. Paul detective, now an unlicensed PI who "helps" out friends. He's been hired to find the paintings and return them to the owner/model, who was also the artist's mistress. However, the artist's wife is also claiming them as well as the man who bought the collection from the wife. On the road to finding these paintings, McKenzie busts a burglary ring, visits Thunder Bay, has a run in with a fired Minneapolis cop who now works for the Cook County Sheriff's department, and finally discovers the murderer. There's also the ethical discussion of if an art piece is sufficiently good enough to be mistaken for a piece created by a master, is it truly a forgery? Keep in mind that an estimated 20% of all art works in museums are forgeries. This was a fun read, and I wish that Rickie's Jazz Bar actually existed...

Who Killed the Fonz? by James Boice (HC, $26.00). How can anyone who grew up with the show resist this book? Richie, now Richard, has moved out to Hollywood with his wife, Lori Beth. He was nominated for an Oscar for a screenplay, and then nothing. So when he gets word that the Fonz has died in a freak motorcycle accident, he has to go back to Milwaukee - Armani suit and all - to pay his respects. While there, Potsie and Ralph first give him a bad time claiming that he "sold out" to the Hollywood glamour, but when it appears the the Fonz was murdered, they bond to find out who did it, especially since the local police have no interest in investigating the accident. Richard is approached by a politician who asks him to write and direct an ad spot for his governor run, and deciding that it's better to do that than get back to Hollywood and write a "Star Wars" clone, he accepts the challenge. What happens after that would be giving away too much. There are frequent flashbacks to the TV show episodes, framed as memories of growing up. This is listed as a "gritty 80's Noir" but it's not. As one other reviewer noted, it's more of a cozy - and if you grew up with the gang, it's a comfortable cozy. Get it for the nostalgia and remember those Happy Days.

The Liar in the Library (expected June 6; TPB $14.00) by Simon Brett. OK, it seems that my mystery book education is sadly lacking - how have I never read read Simon Brett? This is the most recent in the Feathering series, with The Blood on the Beach (PB $6.99), Death on the Downs, The Torso in the Town, Murder in the Museum, The Hanging in the Hotel, The Witness at the Wedding (PB $7.99), The Stabbing in the Stables, Death Under the Dryer, Blood at the Bookies, The Poisoning in the Pub, The Shooting in the Shop, Bones Under the Beach Hut, Guns in the Gallery, The Corpse on the Court, The Strangling on the Stage, The Tomb in Turkey, The Killing in the Cafe previously. We often have some in used - come on in and check it out! This book features Jude, who has semi-retired to Feathering, and Carole - her less-than-warm neighbor, trying to clear Jude from a murder charge. Jude was the last person to see her old best friend's husband alive at an author party in the local library. Suspects appear and are cleared as in any good English countryside mystery, with the real killer well concealed until the end. This was a fun read - following some of the "Golden Age" mysteries, the bad guys got what was coming to them, and everything works out in the end.

Breaking Cat News: Cats Reporting on the News that Matters to Cats ($12.99) and Lupin Leaps In: A Breaking Cat News Adventure ($9.99) both are graphic novels by Georgia Dunn and aren't mysteries in the classical sense, but as a cat owner, I found them hilarious - laugh out loud funny. There is poignancy - with the mysterious backyard cat, Elvis' great escape into the outdoors and fears that he'll be lost forever, and the Return of the Vacuum Cleaner - what will it destroy this time? These are sold as kids books, but adults will enjoy them too - much as Rocky and Bullwinkle are enjoyable on a whole different level as an adult!

On to True Crime... Black Dahlia, Red Rose (TPB, $15.95) by Piu Eatwell is a "solving" of the Black Dahlia murder in 1947 Hollywood. A young starlet is found gruesomely murdered in a vacant lot. Using old files and interviews as well as sleuthing skills, Eatwell has given us a believable answer to a 70 year old mystery. Her writing is eminently readable; highly descriptive and almost like a novel in style. The tale unfolds with the chronology and characters introduced in time in place, with segues into police corruption at the time and other asides that help to place the events in the proper "time". There is a lot of information that still hasn't been released or has disappeared, according to the author, including witness reports, pictures, and hard evidence. Many of the people involved have since died so those interviews weren't possible. Her theory of the murderer is well supported by the facts that she had access to, but there is so much that has never been released or has gotten lost that this will probably always stay unsolved
