Signed Books

Patrick S. Tomlinson had a signing on July 6 on fairly short notice. We still have lots of signed copies of The Ark ($7.99, generation ship, hard sf/mystery crossover, Children of a Dead Earth #1), Trident's Forge ($7.99, Children of a Dead Earth #2), Children of the Divide ($7.99, Children of a Dead Earth #3), Gate Crashers $18.99, humorous space opera), and Starship Repo ($18.99, humorous space opera).

Lois McMaster Bujold just had a signing for The Flowers of Vashnoi ($25.00, a Vorkosigan Series novella that follows Captain Vorpatri's Alliance). We still have some signed copies left, as well as signed copies of everything else that is in print and a few things that are no longer in print.

Larry Correia often signs at Uncle Hugo's, but when Monster Hunter Guardian ($25.00) came out, he had just finished his new house and was moving from his old house to his new house. Although he didn't tour for the new book, he did sign a case of the books for the people who like to get signed copies from Uncle Hugo's. As this goes to the printer, we still have a few signed copies left.

Sharon Lee and Steve Miller will not be appearing at Uncle Hugo's for Accepting the Lance ($25.00, Liaden Universe #22, due early December), but they will be signing copies and shipping them to Uncle Hugo's. If you let us know before November 10 that you want your copy personalized, we can handle that.

How's Business? by Don Blyly

Nationally, book sales were down for five of the first six months of 2019 compared to the same period in 2018. During that period, adult fiction fell 5.1% compared to 2018 (when adult fiction fell 4% compared to 2017). Barnes and Noble reported that their book sales fell 3.9% for their fiscal year ending April 29, 2019, while their sales of toys and games increased after Toys R Us closed. It's not surprising that the Uncles have also experienced a small decline in book sales. But we continue to see used books accounting for an increasing percentage of our business, and the profit margin from used books is better than for new books, so we're still holding on.

Barnes & Noble has sold itself to Elliott Advisers, the same company that owns Waterstone's, the largest bookstore chain in the U.K., and the man who is given credit for saving Waterstone's will be moving from London to New York to run both chains. The major publishers seem to be optimistic about the move, but smaller publishers are concerned. Apparently Waterstone's has been emphasizing major books from larger publishers and giving less display to slower selling books from smaller publishers.

Pearson, one of the largest textbook publishers worldwide, has announced that for the U.S. market they are shifting to a digital first model. All future releases of their 1,500 U.S. textbook titles will be in e-book format, with an average price of $40 to rent only the e-book, or $79 for a package that includes the e-book plus a batch of additional digital learning tools. They report that 62% of their current higher education revenue already comes from digital products and services. Since they don't need brick and mortar college bookstores to sell e-books, and would rather sell the books online and not have to share the revenue with bookstores, this is probably the beginning of the end for college bookstores, once a few more major textbook publishers join the trend.

For around the last 33 years I've been the secretary of the local business association (which often includes neighborhood activists and representatives of neighborhood organizations, in addition to business owners, landlords, and property management people, representatives from the police department, and also used to include representatives for city council members and other politicians—but the politicians have been ignoring us for about the last 10 years). One of the problems that has been brought up periodically over the past 33 years that I've been taking notes, and probably for years before that, is prostitution on the streets around Lake St. Business owners don't like it when a bunch of prostitutes, pimps, and drug dealers take over the section of street near their businesses, because customers for the businesses don't feel safe parking their cars and walking to the businesses, and don't like being propositioned while walking from their car to the businesses they want to visit. Neighborhood residents don't feel safe in their homes with the illegal activities going on. The "johns" driving in from the suburbs often proposition residents of the neighborhood, including kids, who have nothing to do with the prostitution. Enough people get riled up enough to force the police to do some busts and some "john stings", the problem becomes less severe for a short while, or at least the problem moves to somewhere else for a while. A couple of years ago some cops went too far in trying to get some arrests in "saunas", and the Minneapolis police stopped enforcing prostitution laws for about a year while the administration came up with new guidelines for appropriate police conduct during enforcement efforts. Last year they were back to trying to enforce the law every once in a while. (It takes a lot of police time to conduct a "sting" operation, so other crimes receive less police time whenever a "sting" is conducted.) During the summer of 2018, almost all of the drug dealers, pimps, and prostitutes left Lake St. to hang out around the homeless "Encampment" near Little Earth. Home robberies, shoplifting, and other problems went way down around Lake St. and went way up around Little Earth. This year, the Encampment is gone, and many of the problems have returned to the Lake St. area.

At the June meeting of the business association, the representative of the police department announced that there was a new police policy regarding prostitution. They had been arresting prostitutes and then offering them a diversion program that would help them get off drugs and into a healthier life style instead of going to jail. But supposedly all of the prostitutes said that they didn't want to get off drugs, didn't want to get off the street, and claimed that there was no pimp involved. This resulted in the police and the politicians believing that no "trafficking" was going on, that the prostitutes were entrepreneurs of legal age living the lifestyle that they wanted and earning a living the way they wanted, bargaining with willing buyers for what they wanted to sell. If "trafficking" was not going on, then no law was being broken as far as the police and the politicians were concerned. And if the police were not going to arrest the prostitute for being on one side of the contract, it wouldn't be fair to arrest the "John" for being on the other side of the contract. (Besides, police management found it is "embarrassing" to ask female cops to go undercover on "John stings".) Thus, the police would refuse to respond to any 9-1-1 calls regarding prostitution and would not make any efforts to arrest anybody in any kind of "sting" operations. This new policy was not well received at the meeting. A neighborhood representative said that if somebody called 9-1-1 because prostitution was going on in front of kids and the police refused to respond, there would be all kinds of trouble. She thought that if the police and politicians were going to do something this stupid, they ought to come up with a better justification than what she had just heard.

At the July meeting of the business association, there was a representative of the county attorney's office. She made it very clear that the county attorney's office does believe that "trafficking" is going on and is very interested in prosecuting pimps and "Johns", but views the prostitutes as victims of "trafficking". But it is hard to prosecute the pimps and "Johns" if the Minneapolis police refuse to arrest them because the politicians ordered them not to arrest them. The representative of the police department said that a lot of discussion has been going on within the police department regarding the new policy, but he felt that he couldn't tell us any details about those discussions.

We starting using a family-owned printing plant in Shakopee for the newsletter 29 years ago. It has changed hands several times since then and has been owned for several years by Quad, one of the largest printers in the country. In the early years I took photo-ready pages out to the plant, they used cameras to produce plates for the press, and after it was printed I would haul all the copies back to the store, print out the mailing labels in the back room, and a bunch of us would stick mailing labels onto the newsletter, bundle them for the bulk mailing center, and I'd haul a van full of bundles and paperwork to the bulk mailing center. Things have changed a lot since then. For many years I've sent a .pdf file of the newsletter via the internet, and the printer handles printing addresses onto the newsletter, bundling them for the post office, filling out the paperwork for the post office, and hauling everything to the bulk mail center.

A lot of printing plants have had many years of falling sales, as fewer companies print and mail catalogs. Some of the larger printing companies have been buying up smaller printing companies, and then shutting them down while trying to get the remaining customers of the smaller printers to switch their business to the remaining plants of the bigger printers. Although the Shakopee plant has been owned by Quad for many years, I've notice that I was sending my .pdf files to Shakopee for a few years, then I was sending the files for a couple of years to California, and then I was sending the files to Wisconsin for a few years. But the printing continued to be done in Shakopee, the mailing was done through the metro area bulk mail center, and I drove out to Shakopee to pick up the extra copies not sent to the bulk mail center.

A week before this issue went to the printer, I received a call from Quad that they were going to be closing the Shakopee plant in a few weeks, so this will be the last issue printed there. Quad wanted me to shift the newsletter to another of their plants in another state, so that the newsletter would have to go through a different bulk mail center, and they would have to ship the hundreds of pounds of extra copies to me. But the person from Quad also said that there were 3 other printing plants in the metro area that would be capable of handling the job, and they will be sending me information about those other plants so that I can get bids from them to compare to the new bid from Quad for their plant in another state. A couple of decades ago the sales person I had been dealing with in Shakopee was hired away by Gannett, and the printing plant that produces USA Today for the metro area was looking for other jobs to keep the presses busy. At that time, a switch would have meant a lower grade of paper, a different trim size of the newsletter, buying and learning new software, but no significant savings, so I stuck with Shakopee. I'll have to compare the different bids, see what kind of changes will be necessary (I don't want to go back to printing the mailing labels in my back room again), and see if it even makes sense to continue the paper newsletter. If we do have a next issue of the paper newsletter, it will probably look a bit different.

Short Recommendations by Don Blyly

The Affair of the Mysterious Letter by Alexis Hall ($16.00) was a lot of fun. The publisher is pushing it as a Sherlock Holmes style fantasy, which it is, but that's not what makes it so much fun. It's the voice of the narrator that I enjoyed. Captain John Wyndham is very prim and proper from a religious background, but he joined the army and served in a war in another universe. After he was wounded by alien bullets that disappear and reappear through time (so that sometimes he is wounded and other times he is not, until the next time the bullets reappear), he leaves the army and moves to a civilian job in the capital city of Khelathra-Ven. He searches for a place to live, and ends up as a housemate of consulting sorceress Ms. Shaharazad Haas at 221b Martyrs Walk. Ms. Haas has a dark and scandalous reputation, richly deserved. She keeps dragging John into her investigations, which he then narrates, trying (very unsuccessfully) to shield the gentle reader from the more scandalous elements of their adventures. Delightful, and hopefully the first of many adventures.

Witchy Kingdom by D. J. Butler ($25.00, signing at Uncle Hugo's Wednesday, September 25, 5-6 pm) is the third in the series of alternate history fantasies that take place in America in the early 1800s, following Witchy Eye ($7.99) and Witchy Winter ($7.99). Earlier in the series, we learned that a descendant of William Penn is the emperor of most of North America south of the Great Lakes and east of the Mississippi. Sarah Calhoun is an Appalachian girl with a witchy eye and some magical abilities, who does not realize that she is one of the triplets born to the last rightful empress. The triplets were secretly snuck out of the palace on the night of their birth and placed in adoptive homes in different parts of the empire, shortly before the current emperor locked up their mother (claiming she was insane), and eventually killed her. Now agents of the current emperor are searching for the triplets, and a few people loyal to her mother are trying to protect them. The first book concentrated on Sarah and those trying to catch her and those trying to protect her. The second book concentrated on the other two of the triplets and those chasing them and those protecting them. At the beginning of the third book Sarah is in Cahokia, accepted by the population as the Beloved of the goddess, but not able to access the power of the Serpent Throne. The forces of the Imperium are besieging Cahokia, with the assistance of necromancers, and other Imperium forces are trying to capture the other two of the triplets. The publisher is calling this "The Finale of the Witchy Wars Series", and by the end of the book Sarah has used the power of the Serpent Throne to break the siege and the other two of the triplets seem to be safe for the moment, but there sure are a lot of bad guys running around and a lot of loose end that are not resolved. I'd be surprised if this is really the final book in the series.

Chilling Effect by Valerie Valdes ($15.99, due mid-September) is a fast-paced oddball space opera and a first novel. I enjoyed it a lot, but had a couple of problems with it. The foul-mouthed female captain of an interstellar freighter is hired to transport a shipment of psychic kittens to another star system, but the kittens keep escaping from the cargo hold, sometimes messing with the brain implants of her crew members, and sometimes taking over the piloting of the ship. When she and her oddball crew finish wrangling the cats and reach their destination, the deal falls through, she's broke, stuck with the cats, and forced into increasingly hazardous missions to try to pay the bills. Seems like a great set-up, but from the point the cat deal falls through the cats seem to become ordinary cats who happen to live on the freighter. And when the captain gets upset (which happens very often), she switches to Spanish (which I don't know) and I was left suspecting that I was not catching many of the funnier lines. In spite of these problems, I can recommend this book for those interested in some fast, light adventure.

Marque of Caine by Charles E. Gannon ($16.00) is the fifth in the Caine Riordan series, after Fire With Fire ($7.99), Trial by Fire ($7.99), Raising Caine (not currently available), and Caine's Mutiny ($7.99). The first four books were primarily military action adventure with lots of alien races, but the new novel is very different. The ancient and enigmatic Dornaani race was supposed to have been protecting Terra from the other alien races, but had not been overwhelmingly helpful or successful. Now Caine Riordan goes to visit the Dornaani empire to retrieve his mortally wounded love Elena Corcoran, who is somewhere in their unthinkable advanced medical facilities. But the Dornaani have misplaced her body, and while searching for her Caine discovers a great deal about their history, their technology and where it came from, and that their empire is decaying. Of course, there is a cliff-hanging ending.

A Little Hatred by Joe Abercrombie ($27.00, due mid-September, signed copies expected) is the first of a new fantasy trilogy set later in time in the same universe as The First Law trilogy. Abercrombie has a well-deserved reputation for writing grim, gritty fantasies, and I like his writing a lot. A Little Hatred continues the grim, gritty tradition, but also includes more humor (much of it grim) than I've encountered before in his books, and I enjoyed this book more than any of his earlier books. And you can enjoy this book even if you haven't read any of the other books. The Union has problems. The Crown Prince is a wastrel, sure that he is totally disqualified to become king, and goes out of his way to prove that to everybody. The industrial revolution has arrived, driving farmers off of their land and into the dangerous factories, leading to revolutionary groups of varying degrees of radicalness, leading to extreme suppression from the aristocracy and the capitalists. The Northmen are invading again and the Union isn't sure if it can borrow enough or raise taxes enough to send an army to defend the border. The magi are manipulating things for their own advantage. Lots of interesting characters, interesting situations, and full of grim and gritty.

Monster Hunter Guardian by Larry Correia and Sarah A. Hoyt ($25.00, a few copies available signed by Larry Correia) follows the adventures of Julie Shackelford after her husband Owen Pitt and most of the rest of the Monster Hunter International crew went away in Monster Hunter Siege ($7.99) to fight in a monster-infested nightmare dimension. Months later Julie is still holding down the fort, taking care of their new baby boy Ray, and wondering if her husband and the rest of the crew will be able to escape the dimension they entered. When Brother Death kidnaps Ray and promises to return him in a swap for an ancient magical item that could destroy the Earth and then fails to return him, Julie and her pet shoggoth Mr. Trash Bags go on the war path against necromantic death cults, child-stealing monsters, and her vampire mother. The book was a lot of fun, even with most of the regular characters missing in that other dimension.

The Grand Dark by Richard Kadrey ($26.99) is not connected to any of his other books, and the writing style is different. His Sandman Slim series and Another Coop Heist series are fast-paced, violent, profane, and funny. The Grand Dark reads more like a China Mieville novel. Set in the city of Lower Proszawa after the Great War (where they were on the losing side), a spirit of decadence and hedonism reigns. But robots are taking jobs from an ever increasing number of people, genetic engineering of animals has become an art form, and the secret police are watching everywhere. Kadrey says it is based loosely on Berlin after the end of the Great War. The story is interesting, but nowhere near as much fun as his other books.

About nine months ago I recommended The Ruin of Kings ($24.99), a major epic fantasy that is the first of a five book series that is already written, which the publisher will be releasing nine months apart. The Name of All Things ($26.99, coming October 29) is the second of the series, and the series continues to be excellent. At the beginning of the book, two days have passed since the major events that occurred at the end of The Ruin of Kings. Kihrin meets with some major characters that he had glimpses of during the first book, and in a style similar to what Patrick Rothfuss used for his books, these characters fill in Kihrin about the events that they experienced during the time when Kihrin was having his adventures. Many of these events took place in the land of Jorat, which was added to the Quur empire centuries before, when the population rose up against their god and asked for help from the Quur empire to kill their god. Their god loved horses, so he created intelligent horses, and gave his people mottled skin colors like the horses, and the people have a culture where the primary goal is to "protect the herd" (referring to the human herd as well as the horse herd). After all the story-telling is done, Kihrin and his new friends and an old enemy move the main story forward. Now I have to wait nine more months for the next installment.

A little over a year ago Patrick S. Tomlinson put out a humorous space opera called Gate Crashers ($18.99, signed copies available). A couple of months ago Starship Repo ($18.99, signed copies available), and it is another humorous space opera. It is set in the same universe, later in time, but can be read independently. (One character in Gate Crashers makes a cameo appearance in Starship Repo.) After the events in Gate Crashers, humans are allowed to become part of the culture of many alien races that had previously quarantined Earth. Firstname Lastname (the result of a clerical error by the alien immigration department, which they claim they will eventually fix) is a teenage human runaway who is skilled in various cons, pick pocketing, and auto theft. She is the only human on a huge alien space station, and when some of the aliens realize how talented she is, they force her to join their repo operation, repossessing space ships from those who don't keep up with their bank payments. They take her under their wings (sometime literally), teach her the ropes, and use her flair for crooked operations to out-perform the other repo outfits. You could pick a lot of holes in the logic of the story, but the novel is a lot of fun. The final repo of the book involves a huge, glitzy casino owned by the alien Fonald Plump, who doesn't believe in paying back his bank loans.

Who Dunit Short Mystery Reviews by Mary McKinley

Back in the days when I was younger and fitter, I belonged to a Scottish Living History group and absorbed my historical knowledge by reading and portraying an herbwife. This was much more fun than sitting in a classroom being lectured at and fed names and dates with no real context. Sitting on out non-fiction shelves, we have the resources to make history interesting, and to meet the people that lived then. Starting with the reprinted trilogy by Frances and Joseph Gies, we have Life in a Medieval City (TPB $15.99), Life in a Medieval Castle (TPB $15.99), and Life in a Medieval Village (TPB $16.99). These books take us into the lives of the various people in the different classes, including what they ate, wore, did, and died from. These books are heavily researched and scholarly, but very readable. Covering much of the same information but in a distinctly different style written slightly more humorously, is The Time Traveler's Guide to Medieval England (TPB $16.99) by Ian Mortimer. He uses the extensive daily chronicles, letters, household accounts, and poems of the day to introduce us to living in the 15th century, and how to get by from simple greetings to how much it costs to stay at an inn. The last one is Medieval Women: Village Life in the Middle Ages (TPB $14.95) by Ann Baer, which follows the day to day life of Marion, a carpenter's wife, and her relationships, on a month by month basis.

Jumping ahead in time, we have The Time Traveler's Guide to Elizabethan England (TPB $18.00) by Ian Mortimer. This does for the Elizabethan Era what his Medieval England does for that time period. There are improvements in society, and it might be slightly easier for one of us to slip into that society, but it's still a rough, highly structured and class society. Elizabethan Society (TPB $17.99) by Derek Wilson looks at the "society" of the times rather than the individual lives. He breaks it down to job duties such as lawyers, doctors, etc. and how and what they did. The Hidden Lives of Tudor Women (TPB $16.95) by Elizabeth Norton not only gives us snippets of specific women, but also of the various classes of the time period. Since most history is written by and about men, it's always interesting to hear the woman's side. There's always the basics that childbirth was the #1 killer of women, but did you know that throughout the ages about 20% of children died within their first year?

And rounding out some little known history, we have Tony Robinson's The Worst Jobs in History (TPB $15.95). This is broken into the worst jobs by era - for instance, in Roman times, we have the Puke Collector. Moving along, (rapidly,) we have the Leech Collectors, which was seasonal work, and a fuller. Jumping ahead to Victorian times, there's the Stone Pickers and Stone Breakers. According to Robinson, the worst job of all based on danger and boredom is the Tanner. It's physically demanding, uses noxious items like dog dung and urine (and sharp blades), and is boring. Given my choices, I'm happy to live now with vaccines, antibiotics, good sewage systems, and clean running water. Oh yeah - effective anesthesia! These are great resources for those of us who like a personal touch to our learning, researching characters for various roles, or just to impress and/or disgust your friends and relatives.

The latest Nicolas Meyer Sherlock Holmes book The Adventure of the Peculiar Protocols (HC $25.99) was a pleasant surprise. Meyer stays true to the voice and the canon of Doyle, with all the characters we know and love. In this story, Sherlock and Holmes are asked by Mycroft to find the source of papers found on a murdered employee of Mycroft's. This investigation takes them to France and then into Russia. This is a nice addition to any Holmes fan's library. Other books by Meyer are: The Seven-Per-Cent Solution (1975 Gold Dagger Award), The West End Horror, and The Canary Trainer. The story starts with Meyer stating that he was given the opportunity to read a newly discovered diary which is said to be written by Watson - and moves on from there. Mycroft summons Holmes to the Diogenes Club, and hands him an assignment - to find out if the papers carried by a murdered agent about the Zionist plot to take over the world is fact or fiction. Meyer stays true-to-form as he writes, while still trying to do his best to wrap up inconsistencies such as how many times was Watson married? And to whom? Being a longstanding Holmes fan, I enjoyed this book - one of the rare "failed" Holmes solutions. Read it and see!

Novelized true crime - See What I Have Done (TPB $16.00) by Sarah Schmidt, was a 2018 Ned Kelly Award finalist. This is another take on the Lizzie Borden murders, told in four voices - Lizzie, sister Emma, maid Bridget, and the stranger, Benjamin. Lizzie's voice is that of a 5-year-old - disjointed, fantasy based, and not what I would expect from a grown woman who (probably) was clever enough to escape a murder conviction. Emma seemed the most realistic - responded as a 40 year-old woman to horrific circumstances. Bridget is clearly unhappy working for the Bordens, wanting nothing more than to go back to Ireland and leave the household violence she is a witness to and has inflicted on her. There's the presence of John - Lizzie and Emma's uncle - who brings Benjamin - abused and abandoned as a young man, and now willing to do "jobs" for money. The author relies heavily on evoking scent - heavy, cloying odors - to help set the scene, and everyone's tongue swirls in their mouths - to the point of distraction. The ending, like most of the mystery, is ambiguous. I'm not sure if I liked this book - it's a first novel and could use some polishing - get rid of the swirling tongues already! I didn't understand if the author wanted to retell the story or create a new one - why the presence of John and Benjamin? If you're a hard-core Lizzie fan, it's an interesting take, but otherwise it doesn't add anything new to her story.

Sometimes, picking up a book in the middle of a series is difficult as you are lost in the established characters, sometimes it's easy because there's enough background to get you up to speed. Heart of Barkness (HC $25.99) by Spencer Quinn is one of the latter. It picks up the tale of Bernie, newly released from the hospital, and his dog Chet, who is the voice of the books. Previous books are: Dog on It, Thereby Hangs a Tail, To Fetch a Thief, The Dog Who Knew Too Much, A Fistful of Collars, The Sound and the Furry, Paw and Order, Scents and Sensibility. It's fun initially to read from a dog's viewpoint - why it's important to sniff things, how to tell a "perp" from a former perp from a good person, and most importantly, how to bite a pant leg and not let go. This time, the pair go to hear Lotty Pilgrim, an old country singer, and of course, someone is killed. Lotty confesses to the crime but is (probably) innocent, there's a cold case that may or may not include disputed song royalties, and a mysterious father. There were enough twists and tangles that I should go back and read the earlier books.

I love to cook. I love to eat (which is obvious if you've met me!) and I love cozies with recipes. Cooked to Death Volume IV Cold Cut Files ($17.95) edited by Rhonda Gilliland is a fun read. This one's stories are all about meat and sides - ham, roast beef, and more! As always, there's a short excerpt from the original book the recipe appeared in, and then the recipe. Some of this volume's recipes are for Corn Puddin', Rhubarb Pie, Pistachio Encrusted Salmon, and Sancocho from South America with other sweets and savories. Others in the series are Cooked to Death Volume I Tales of Crime and Cookery ($16.95) with Meringue Pie, Lemon Curd, Peanut Butter Cookie Strawberry Fool; Cooked to Death: Lying on a Plate Vol. II ($17.95) including Chicken Wild Rice Soup, Lobster Macaroni Salad, Mounds Bars, Shrimp and Artichokes in Wine, oh my! Lastly is Cooked to Death for the Holidays Volume III ($17.95) with such classics as Candy Cane Drops, South African Curried Ground Lamb Casserole, and Puerto Rican Eggnog. OK. I think it's lunch time for me now! As a bonus, most of the writers and ingredients are local and locally sourced.

We've been cataloging a lot of old Hardy Boys, Nancy Drew, Trixie Belden, and many others of the 40s-60s era kids detective series. They start at $4.00 and go up, and are fun to read as an adult for the nostalgia, and a fun introduction for kids as well as a glimpse into how life was 50 or so years ago. Quality ranges from like new to pages intact but barely. Check them out!

Also in kids books we have a lot of new writers and stories - my current favorite is Turn Left at the Cow (TPB $7.99) by Lisa Bullard. For anyone who lives or travels in any rural outstate area, we all know that directions are given by landmark, hence the title. Thirteen-year-old Travis runs away from his mom and new step-dad in California to try and find out what happened to his dad who is missing (after a bank heist) and presumed dead. He meets the next door kids, and there's a bit of romance - hand-holding - and the search is on for the money, information about Travis' dad, and why his grandmother has so much dead meat in her freezer. And a human head. This is also partly a coming-of-age book, as Travis learns more about his past and how he fits into the world. The ending was a complete surprise to me - which is always fun! I recommend it for 5th graders up.

Also in the Juvenile section - Encyclopedia Brown! These slim books are new and updated stories of the ones I devoured as a kid - he and Nancy Drew instilled my sense of finding the solution before it was revealed. In my later years, that background helped me with research papers in school, taught me how to write coherently, and overall made me take a deeper look at what I was told, all traits I still find valuable. If you have a kid in your life that enjoys stimulation of the non-electrical kind, get them hooked on books!

As I look at the Cozies I've decided my next job should be writing the titles for these books. I enjoy the cozies - bathtub books - when I want something light that I can easily pick up and put down, read a few pages before I fall asleep, or while waiting. Some of my old favorites are Aunt Dimity by Nancy Atherton (my sister got me hooked on her by reading to me when I was sick), the Bird series by Donna Andrews, and most recently the Juliet Blackwell Witchcraft series. I admit the cover caught me on this - she's dressed in a vintage '20s wedding dress, and I love that era of clothing. So I had to check it out. Her other books in this series are: Secondhand Spirits ($7.99), A Cast-Off Coven, Hexes and Hemlines, In a Witch's Wardrobe, Tarnished and Torn, A Vision in Velvet, Spellcasting in Silk, A Toxic Trousseau, A Magical Match ($7.99), Bewitched and Betrothed ($7.99). Lily Ivory has a vintage store in San Francisco and is a practicing Witch who is trying to keep her head down and not attract attention. Over the course of the series, her familiar Oscar - a pot-bellied pig, is kidnapped and found, more people are found dead and their killers brought to justice, vintage clothing styles are discussed, and Lily prepares for her own wedding while battling demons. A fun read, especially if you like a bit of the mystical and clothing history along with your mysteries.

While it's fun to read stories where everything is neatly tied up at the end, the unsolved cases are endlessly fascinating - was Lizzie Borden really the killer? And perhaps the greatest unsolved mystery - who was Jack the Ripper? The Five (new HC $27.00) by Hallie Rubenhold doesn't pretend to answer that, instead giving us the history of the five women that were killed. Rubenhold did research and presents us with five living, breathing women who had lives and stories and just enough of misfortune to find themselves earning a living the best they could. As a side note, only one out of the five was ever proven to be a prostitute - the rest did their best to earn a living however they could. Being female and born into poor circumstances, they weren't all educated or trained in a profession. Rubenhold wants us to remember that these were mothers, daughters, sisters, wives, and lovers - not just prostitutes, not just victims, but humans who deserve the respect and honor that we would give to any victim of a horrific crime. This book is compelling - it doesn't cover the gruesome details of the killings or how the bodies were found, instead it tells us that these women weren't adjuncts to Jack, but real women with hopes and dreams. I highly recommend it - not only for the history of the women, but also the time, place and context of the slums that contributed to their early deaths.
