46th Anniversary Sale

Uncle Hugo's is the oldest surviving science fiction bookstore in the United States. We opened for business on March 2, 1974. To encourage you to help us celebrate Uncle Hugo's 46th Anniversary, we are having a sale. Come into either Uncle Hugo's or Uncle Edgar's and get 10% off everything except gift certificates and discount cards. A discount card will save you even more—you'll get the 10% off from the sale plus the 10% discount from the discount card. (Sale prices apply only to in-store sales, not to mail orders.)

The 46th Anniversary Sale lasts Friday, February 28 through Sunday, March 8, giving you two weekends to take advantage of the sale.

New T-shirts & Sweatshirts

We are almost out of T-shirts and are getting low on some sizes and colors of sweatshirts, but we have to order at least 250 shirts at a time to get a reasonable price, and it doesn't make sense to invest in new T-shirts in the middle of winter. We will be ordering a new printing of T-shirts and sweatshirts around the end of March. We normally order T-shirts in sizes adult small through XXL and sweatshirts in sizes adult large through XXL, but we can order smaller or larger sizes if we know that you want them before we place the order. The prices have stayed the same for the last six years, but we don't know yet if the price will go up this time. The current prices are $14 for T-shirts in sizes up to XL and $17 for XXL; for sweatshirts the current prices are $27 for sizes up to XL and $30 for XXL. Add a few dollars for XXXL and even more for XXXXL.

The shirts either have Uncle Hugo's on the front and Uncle Edgar's on the back, or Uncle Edgar's on the front and Uncle Hugo's on the back. For sweatshirts we usually go with ash (light grey), black, Kelly green, purple, red, and royal blue. We usually do about 10 different colors for the T-shirts, including the same colors as for the sweatshirts. The T-shirt manufacturers take some colors out of production and introduce some new colors each year, and we don't know yet which additional colors will be available this year.

If you are interested in placing a special order, let us know before the end of March what size you want, which logo you want on the front, whether you want a T-shirt or a sweatshirt, and your preference for color. An e-mail would be best so that we know how to contact you when we find out what the cost will be and to contact you again when the shipment arrives.

How's Business? by Don Blyly

Nationally, it was not a good year for the book industry. Bookstore sales were down, while the rest of retail was up. Here at the Uncles, in-store sales for the year were down about 4% but mail order sales were up by about 34%, so overall our sales were up by about 2%.

Then came January. The previous year January was known for the polar vortex, including three days in a row with low temperatures below -20 degrees, and we had to close for a while because the furnace stopped working during the polar vortex. This January we had very little snow and above average temperatures. It was so much easier to get around this January than last January that we expected to see a significant increase in business. That didn't happen. But at least our heating bill was lower than last year.

I read a report that there were around 1.5 million new self-published titles last year, a large increase over the 1 million new self-published titles the previous year. I also read that 93% of all books sold less than 50 copies per year. While a few people are doing well with self-publishing, the vast majority are not.

The last 3 months have not been kind to Ecco, the store dog. She loves to drag me on half mile walks around the neighborhood near the store several times per day, being especially interested in the “sidewalk smorgasbord”. One day she found half a burrito on the sidewalk by the hospital; another day she found 2 slices of bacon on the sidewalk in front of the hotel. And there are chicken bones from Popeyes scattered all over the neighborhood. One morning she found something in the alley behind Popeyes and when I tried to take it away from her, I found that it was some kind of plant material instead of a bone, and she managed to swallow some of it. A few hours later, her legs started to shake, she looked frightened, and then she couldn’t even stand up. I took her into an emergency vet clinic, and they started asking me if she could have gotten into some anti-freeze, some household cleaners, some human medicine, etc. They then did a blood test and found THC in her system. Apparently somebody had dropped their stash in the alley behind Popeyes and she managed to eat some of it. The vet explained that a dog has over 100 times more receptors for THC than a human has, so she was very stoned and scared because she had never experienced anything like this before. She gave Ecko some activated charcoal mixed into baby food to help absorb anything still in her digestive tract and injected a lot of water under her skin on her back to make her urinate a lot more to flush the THC out of her system. $484 later, we managed to leave the clinic, having turned down the offer to leave her overnight at the clinic for observation for an additional $1000 plus. She is always so eager for food that I couldn’t tell if she had the munchies or not. She spent a couple of days at home in a darkened room and then returned to the store. (After this experience, I talked to another guy whose dog had also found a bit of weed while taking a walk, with similar results and a similar vet bill. This raises a problem with legalized recreational pot that I had never thought of before.) She didn’t learn any lessons about grabbing food-like items on her walks. Since she supposedly has a sense of smell around 10,000 times better than a human, I’m constantly amazed at how often she lunges for a cigarette butt on the sidewalk, thinking it is a chicken wing bone.

About a month later she partially tore the dew-claw on her front right foot, probably while running up and down the length of the chain link fence along the back edge of the back yard, telling off somebody in the alley. That has resulted in several visits to the vet, some pain pills, some antibiotics, and hundreds of dollars in vet bills.

Short Recommendations by Don Blyly

I’ve previously recommended Castaway Planet and Castaway Odyssey by Eric Flint and Ryk E. Spoor, a couple of modern attempts to duplicate a Heinlein juvie. The third volume is Castaway Resolution ($25.00, early March). Much of this story involves the adults in a distant star system that put together a research team to visit the system where the castaways are located, without realizing there are any castaways at their destination. The book does a fine job of wrapping up the series, but is best read after reading the first two books in the trilogy (which are not currently available as new books).

Hope for the Best ($13.99) is the tenth novel in Jodi Taylor’s The Chronicles of St. Mary’s series, from a different publisher in the U.S. than the previous books in the series, with a slightly smaller trim size than the earlier books in the series, and with a small “10” on the back of the book. (The one thing that has always bothered me about this wonderful time travel series is that the earlier books are not numbered on the cover, and it helps a lot if you read them in order.)

Max gets the bright idea to help the Time Police in a complex plan to try to trap the renegade time traveler Clive Ronan, so that it will be safe for her son to leave the protective custody of the Time Police and come home to St. Mary’s. Of course, things go spectacularly wrong.

Several of Jodi Taylor’s non-St. Mary’s books will become available in the U.S. for the first time over the next couple of months, and I’m looking forward to seeing if they are as much fun as the St. Mary’s books.

The Book of Koli ($16.99, coming mid-April) by M. R. Carey (aka Mike Carey) is the first of a post-apocalyptic trilogy set in England. Many generations after an ecological collapse, Koli is a young guy growing up in a small walled village, and the language in which he tells his story makes clear that he didn't have much education. When the ecology started to go bad, the humans had genetically altered the trees so that they could move to areas with sufficient water and fertilizer, and since then the genetics have altered to the point that the trees can move much faster than planned, and have discovered the squished humans make great fertilizer. So, on sunny days the trees hunt the humans and on very cloudy days the humans harvest trees. There are still a very limited number of functioning technological wonders from before the collapse, and those in charge of the village use that tech to stay in power. About half of the book is about Koli coming of age in the village and the other half is after he is forced out of the village into the hostile world. In the first book, Koli comes across as naive (because of his age and background) and not very bright (partly because of the language he uses). I'm hoping that the next two books will give a better understanding of the rest of the world and how it got to the condition it is in.

K.B. Wagers has written a series of fast-paced space operas about Hail Bristol, who was born a princess of a Hindu matriarchy. When her father was assassinated, she left the royal court of the empire to try to track down the killer. When she lost the trail, she became a famed gun-runner with all the best underground connections. But when other members of her family start being killed, she is dragged back to her home planet to become empress of the Indranan Empire. The first trilogy, The Indranan War, consists of Behind the Throne ($14.99), After the Crown ($15.99), and Beyond the Empire ($15.99).

By the end of the first trilogy, she has saved the empire, but it is battered and she is looking forward to patching it up. But there is an escalating war between aliens that is threatening to spiral into human space, and Hail is pulled into the middle of it in There Before the Chaos ($15.99, The Farian War #1). At the beginning of Down Among the Dead ($16.99, The Farian War #2), Hail is the captive of one of the alien races, and they are seriously messing with her mind, including repeatedly killing her and bringing her back to life so that she will eventually learn to bring herself back to life when she leads the attack on the home planet of the other alien race. She eventually figures out what is going on and does unexpected things, leading to an ending of the second book that made me want to start the third book immediately. But it seems I'll have to wait a while for the next in the series.

A Pale Light in the Black ($26.99, coming early March) is the beginning of a new series by K. B. Wagers from a different publisher. The Near-Earth Orbital Guard (NeoG) is like the Coast Guard of outer space, with both rescue and law enforcement roles. Every year the Boarding Games take place on Earth, pitting the best teams of NeoG against the best teams of the other military branches, and last year the crew of the NeoG Interceptor Zuma's Ghost came in second to a SEAL team. This year they want to come out on top. Between their rescue missions and their anti-smuggler missions, they practice for the Game. And then a large part of the book is dedicated to the Preliminaries (where a bunch of NeoG crews go to Earth to determine which teams get to represent NeoG) and the Games. The characters and their interactions are fun, the science is terrible, and the plot moves along well. I enjoyed the book, between cringes over the bad science. (When one character gets punched out in the Preliminaries on Earth, we are told "he dropped faster than someone stepping onto a high-g asteroid." Both the good guys and the bad guys fight with swords on space ships, apparently on the basis that a bullet could puncture the wall of the ship, but a sword thrust couldn't puncture the wall. The entire asteroid belt is patrolled from a base orbiting Jupiter. And it takes a few hours for a NeoG Interceptor to get from their base orbiting Jupiter to a science station orbiting Saturn.) If bad science doesn't bother you, you'll probably enjoy it even more than I did.

Penric's Progress by Lois McMaster Bujold ($25.00, signed copies available) is a collection of three novellas set in the World of the Five Gods (The Curse of Chalion, The Paladin of Souls, and The Hallowed Hunt), but it is not necessary to have read any of the novels to enjoy the Penric stories. The Penric stories are separated by at least a century from the original novels and have a completely new batch of characters. Each of the Penric stories originally came out as an e-book, an audio-book, and then as individual hardcovers from Subterranean Press.

One of the five gods, The Bastard, is responsible for demons. When young Lord Penric is on the way to his betrothal, he comes upon an elderly Temple divine who is dying. When she dies, her demon jumps to Penric, and as the demon and Penric learn to communicate with each other. Penric starts to learn how to be a sorcerer, and the religious orders are very upset that the demon did not go to the religious scholar who was scheduled to receive it. But the demon is very happy to be paired with Penric and has no interest in pairing with anybody else.

Penric's Progress contains the first 3 of the 6 Penric novellas written so far (Penric's Demon, Penric and the Shaman, and Penric's Fox (the only one of the three which we still have some signed copies of the Subterranean Press edition at $25.00, and my favorite of the three). The next three novellas are Penric's Mission, Mira's Last Dance, and The Prisoner of Limnos, which we still have as Subterranean Press books at $25.00 each, but they will be contained in the Penric's Travels omnibus in early May at $25.00.

I'm a big fan of Brian McClellan's books. He first wrote the Powder Mage Trilogy (Promise of Blood ($16.99), The Crimson Campaign ($17.00) and The Autumn Republic ($16.99). The kings rely on the power of the Privileged, who are magic users. But then black powder is developed, and not only is it useful for firearms, but some people can sniff black powder and use it for magical abilities totally different from the magic used by the Privileged. The balance of power suddenly shifts and war breaks out, with various gods taking sides in the human war. At the end of the wonderful series, some of the surviving main characters decide to head over to another continent until things cool down on their home continent.

The Gods of Blood and Powder Trilogy (Sins of Empire ($16.99), Wrath of Empire ($16.99), and Blood of Empire ($29.00, recently released) follows those characters from the Powder Mage Trilogy plus a lot of new characters.

Most of the characters have been introduced and the political situation in capital city of Landfall on the continent of Fatrasta has been laid out when suddenly the Dynize empire invades from yet another continent, bringing yet another kind of magic into the story. There are godstones hidden in Fatrasta, and the Dynize believe that if they can seize and activate the godstones, they can turn their emperor into a god (or perhaps his top henchman can become a god before the emperor figures out what is going on). Military battles, magical battles, political battles, double crosses, etc., run up and down Fatrasta through the three books, and into Dynize in the third book. By the end of the third book, the Dynize and the godstones have been dealt with, and some of the surviving characters hop onto a ship, perhaps headed for another trilogy, perhaps not.

I get a lot of advance reading copies of books from the publishers, though not that often of the books I'd really like to receive. They pile up in the back room, and when I can't find anything I want to read among the recent arrivals, I go through the piles of older titles to sample authors I haven't read before. That's how I discovered Frank Chadwick, and after reading one book I grabbed every other book I could find by him. He is great with fast-paced action adventure with interesting science, he shows great skill at working in back stories without slowing the action for a data dump, but what I like most is the way he handles characters. He has written 5 books for Baen Books, 2 of which are already unavailable.

The Forever Machine is a parallel world novel that is already unavailable. An American history expert is called in as a consultant by a British intelligence officer that he had served with in Afghanistan. The British think they have found evidence of somebody using a time machine to alter history. The American is accidentally sent to an 1888 London where Mars has already been colonized.

His other 4 books are hard sf/space operas/ military sf set in a universe where the alien Varoki came up with faster-than-light travel and started exploring. Whenever they found another alien race, they added the new aliens to the Cottohazz, a confederation of races, but as a condition of joining the new race had to agree to the intellectual property laws of the Varoki, which gave patent protection forever to inventions, such as the faster-than-light drive, and any new inventions based on the same science went to the holders of the patents on the older inventions. And various Varoki corporations own all the patents on all kinds of things that the other races want to buy. All the new technology improved the lives of the new members of the Cottohazz, but the Varoki always came out on top. The humans were the 6th race in the Cottohazz, and are at the bottom of the heap financially and with regard to power in the Cottohazz.

How Dark the World Becomes ($7.99) is the first of the series and features Sasha Naradnyo as the main character. His parents were among the 100,000 humans that the Varoki recruited to the harsh colony planet Peesgtaan as labor, with the promise of transportation back to Earth when the work was done. When the shell company that hired them went bankrupt, there was no transportation back to Earth, and things have been tough for the humans ever since. There are certain things that the humans do better than any of the other races, and one of those things is organized crime. Sasha is a mid-level crime boss when his homicidal sociopathic boss decides to kill him, and at the same time the human nanny of a couple of very rich Varoki kids is looking for a bodyguard to help smuggle them off the planet after their father is murdered by some well-connected hitmen who also wanted to kill the kids. A very good, gritty noir novel in a science fiction setting results, which eventually becomes military sf. Sasha reminds me a lot of the early Vlad Taltos by Steven Brust.

The second book, Come the Revolution ($15.00), still has Sasha as the main character, but he is now the security chief for one of the two kids from the first novel, and they are on the Varoki home world. When the Varoki set up the Cottohazz, they had 27 nations on their home world, so they forced each of the other alien races to divide into 27 nations, with each nation getting one representative in the Cottohazz, and the Varoki still have 27 nations, which sometimes go to war with each other, usually on colony planets. A military coup takes over the nation where Sasha and his associates are located, with a rabidly anti-human civilian spokesman helping to call the shots for the new government. Sasha gets his Varoki charges safely to another nation, but can't get himself out. He hides in a human slum, helping a human resistance movement fight off racist vigilante militia forces and eventually the military forces that staged the coup. Lots of fast action and lots of interesting characters.

The third book, Chain of Command, switches to a different main character and is military sf involving fleet action in space. It is also no longer available in the U.S. The mass market edition came out last March, quickly sold out, and so far Baen Books has not reprinted it. Lt. Sam Bitka is a U.S. Navy Reserve officer who has been called up to active duty, but is fed up with the Navy establishment and just wants to get back to his civilian job. But the Navy has made him tactical officer on a space destroyer sent to the K'Tok system where there is a human colony on a planet mainly occupied by the Varoki. A human fleet is sent to the system, officially to "show the flag" to discourage Varoki aggression against humans, but a high-level admiral safely back on Earth has decided that a war would be great for his career. Meanwhile, a segment of the Varoki military that was behind the coup back in Come the Revolution has decided to launch a war against the humans, figuring that once a war is started their government will be forced to support it. The book is spectacularly good military sf and would have a permanent spot on my Recommended SF display if it were available. Bitka ends up commanding the destroyer and plotting combat strategies that win the battles in the K'Tok system, but in ways that piss off the high ranking officers back on Earth.

The fourth book, Ship of Destiny ($16.00, coming early March), is a direct sequel to Chain of Command, and the reader is expected to already be familiar with Bitka and all the other characters from the previous book. Bitka has been transferred to another ship in the K'Tok system when an alien probe nobody has ever seen before pops up near his ship, sends a coded message that takes over the faster-than-light drive, and the ship takes them on a 3000 light year journey to a section of the galaxy that is far beyond anything the Cottohazz has explored. They encounter an alien race, and the Guardians. The Guardians are immortal beings who go around genetically manipulating critters into intelligent races, so that the races can worship the Guardians. All of the races that the Guardians create have 3 fingers and a thumb (just like the Guardians) and speak the same language as the Guardians. The Guardians believe that all intelligent races were created by them. Yet here is a ship full of humans and other aliens that clearly were not created by Guardians, and they are using star drive technology stolen from a missing Guardian. Bitka is once again in a war where he is outnumbered by technologically superior aliens.

Another older advance reading copy I read was War Dogs by Greg Bear ($16.00). Some aliens secretly landed on Earth, plugged into the internet, started leaking technological information to selected parties for stock, until they had a bunch of important contacts and a lot of wealth, and then became public. There were only about 30 of them, and they became known as the Gurus. They developed considerable influence with governments and major industries. If the humans did what the Gurus wanted, the technology transfer continued. If the humans displeased the Gurus, the technology transfer stopped. Before long, the Gurus got whatever they wanted. Then they mentioned that there was a very hostile race that had been chasing the Gurus, and the hostile race had now entered the solar system and were building bases on Mars, so the humans would have to go to war on Mars. With some new technology from the Gurus, the governments of Earth launched a war against Mars. The alien race on Mars is referred to as the Antagonists, shortened to the Antags, and sometimes to the Ants. They refuse to communicate with the humans. The small number of human colonists who followed Elon Musk to Mars are left alone by both sides, but the human soldiers sent at the request of the Gurus are fought fiercely. The grunts start to wonder why the Gurus insist on sending human soldiers instead of supplying the technology for fighting robots. The orders from Earth often don't make sense. And then some truly ancient technology is found under Mars that seems to be beyond anything they've seen from either the Gurus or the Ants. The story is told from the point of view of a grunt who has spent several tours on Mars. Both grunts and a few people back on Earth are starting to suspect something strange is going on, but the governments want the technology transfers to continue. I have the second book of the trilogy, Killing Titan ($15.99) set aside to read as soon as the newsletter is finished. The final book is Take Back the Sky ($15.99).

Fortune's Favor ($8.00, signed) and Shout of Honor ($10.00, signed) by Sharon Lee & Steve Miller are short trade paperbacks of short stories in the Liaden Universe series. I have a strong preference for novels over short stories, but still enjoyed these stories that help to flesh out the universe while telling stories that don't fit into the story arcs of the novels.

Mystery Reviews

As the cataloging of used hardcovers and trade paperbacks continue, we're finding more oldies but goodies. Check our listing on Abebooks.com.

Let's talk about Cozies for a bit. Do you read them? Why? For the recipes and/or patterns? Because they're quick and usually not too bloody or violent? Or did the title or animal on the cover draw you in? I've decided my next dream job would be to write titles for cozies... I do have a few favorite authors previously mentioned - Nancy Atherton's Aunt Dimity, Donna Andrews Meg Lanslow, and any of Elizabeth Peters. I admit I read them for the recipes - knitting is still magic to me, and people that can read the patterns - I admire them.

Which brings me to Murder with Cherry Tarts ($7.99) by Karen Rose Smith. This is book four in her Daisy's Tea Garden Mystery Series, preceded by Murder with Lemon Tea Cakes ($7.99), Murder with Cinnamon Scones ($7.99), and Murder with Cucumber Sandwiches ($7.99). I love cherry tarts, and looking at this cover all day makes me hungry. I have not read the previous books, and found that I didn't need to - there's enough of a recap threaded in to be able to know who is who. I found the writing very readable and could hear the distinct voices of the characters as the story progresses. And what a story! Daisy is the owner of a local Tea Shop in a tourist area, and one of her employees has started taking home the leftover pastries and soup each night. Concerned, Daisy follows her to a less than touristy part of town (aka the bad part of town) and finds that she's giving the food to a widower, Keith, and his daughter who are living in his van. To make matters worse, Keith becomes the prime suspect in the murder of a local shop owner. Daisy, of course, has to help and then runs into her own troubles. It seems that the real killer doesn't want to be found, so measures are taken to prevent Daisy from clearing the name of the suspect and finding the real killer including vandalizing her business van and attempted murder. This was fast paced, moved right along, and had a bit of a surprise ending. Overall, a very satisfactory read and another series for me to start at the beginning! And cherry tarts for dessert...

M. C. Beaton, the author of the Agatha Raisin and Hamish McBeth series, died December 2019. She was a prolific writer and her above mentioned characters became TV shows. I've heard from some readers that the shows were vastly different from the books, which really isn't any great revelation. So in the interest of science, I decided to find out for myself. The most recent book is Beating About the Bush ($26.99) and is the 30th in the Agatha Raisin series. Aggie continues in her anti-heroine role, irascible, argumentative - all-in-all a rather unpleasant person. So it comes as a surprise when she falls in love with a murder suspect that is very similar to her, except that the suspect has four legs... If you're already a fan of Agatha, you'll love this book. If you're new to her, you'll soon be a fan. If you want the books to be like the TV show, you'll be disappointed - the books are so much better! More depth, more characters, less "nice" Agatha, and much funnier! Reading about her love life and mishaps makes me quit complaining about mine. For all her lack of tact and brashness, she does have (deeply buried) a heart of gold and good friends. We have a good share of Beaton's previous books in both new and used and in various formats. Become a fan!

And speaking of popular series taken from books - I have to give a shout-out to Kerry Greenwood's Phryne Fisher series. I had forgotten how rich the books are - in depth, descriptive, and overall more satisfying. We generally have most of them in stock either new or used and while they don't have to be strictly read in order, the first few do. Cocaine Blues (tpb, $15.00) is the first and covers our introduction to the Hon. Miss Fisher, and how she decided to move back to Australia. We also meet Dot and both of the Butlers - that's right - Mr Butler is married. We also have Introducing the Honorable Phryne Fisher: Cocaine Blues / Flying Too High / Murder on the Ballarat (tpb $24.99) which combines all of the first three. That should get you ready for the release of the Phryne Fisher movie on February 27 - "Miss Fisher and The Crypt of Tears". Some of the later books have Mr. Butler's cocktail recipes in the back - some of them sound downright yummy.

Moving on to a more serious vein, The Confessions of Frannie Langton (hc, $26.99) by Sara Collins provides a wonderful character study. The setting in London in 1826. Frannie is a servant accused of the double murder of her employers. She was born a slave in Jamaica, and at age 7 was taken into the house and taught to read by the Lady of the House - a bored white woman - the most dangerous kind according to the cook. As she grows up, she is taken under the wing of her owner to help him in his experiments. His goal is to prove that slaves - African Americans - aren't human - and performing horrible tests on them to prove his hypothesis. After a huge fire, he takes Fannie to a colleague of his in London and leaves her to be a maid for the wife. Slavery had been abolished in Britain by then, so Frannie was a servant - unpaid and still subject to abuse, but theoretically free. When asked why she didn't leave, she replied that no one told her she could. This book has been described as Gothic and compared to Jane Eyre and while there are similarities, they tend to be more in how women, especially women of color, were perceived and treated. There's the obligatory opium, the obligatory forbidden love, and the missing memory of whether or not Frannie really killed the couple. In many respects, this is a very powerful, well told story. It kept me turning the pages until the very end, which I found a little disappointing - everything was tied up neatly, and a little too rapidly. Overall, however, it was a fascinating story and I could almost see it happening as a true story.

I'm a non-native Minnesotan (nevermind that I've lived here most of my life) and I have yet to get used to winter (did I mention I moved here in 1972?). So along about midwinter, I find that reading books set in warmer climates helps - which is why I love Tim Dorsey (recently reviewed), Carl Hiaasen, Randy Wayne White (previously reviewed), John D. MacDonald (needs no review), Laura Morrigan (previously reviewed), and Elaine Veits Dead End series. Of those, so far Tim Dorsey has been my favorite - how can you not love an altruistic psychopath? Veits is another cozy writer and I've enjoyed her books too. We have all these writers in stock in various formats and conditions - check our website for used or call or come in.

Hiaasen is a popular writer - I've seen his books come and go with regular frequency, so I figured it was time to pick one up and read it. His books are non-series, so off our used paperback shelf, I grabbed Razor Girl, in part because it has a redhead in a convertible on the cover. Merry Mansfield has a highly specialized job - she kidnaps people for the mob and has a pretty decent technique for getting to them - she rear-ends them and then asks for a ride. Most people are glad to oblige, in part because her technique/excuse is that she's shaving while driving - an intimate area. Her latest mark is an accident in more ways than one - he's not the one she's looking for. He is an innocent bystander who gets kidnapped and is "disappeared". Merry and Andrew Yancy, an ex-cop, go on the search for Lane Coolman, hoping to rescue him before it's too late. Along the way they meet an interesting assortment of characters, including giant Gambian pouched rats, reality TV stars who believe in themselves too much, illegal beach sand selling - you name it, Florida has it. I found myself laughing throughout the book, and may have a new favorite Florida writer.

On a sadder note, Mark Schweizer, the author of the Liturgical Mysteries (previously reviewed) also passed away last November. His books, in order, are The Alto Wore Tweed, The Baritone Wore Chiffon, The Tenor Wore Tapshoes, The Soprano Wore Falsettos, The Bass Wore Scales, The Mezzo Wore Mink, The Diva Wore Diamonds, The Organist Wore Pumps, The Countertenor Wore Garlic, The Christmas Cantata, The Treble Wore Trouble, The Cantor Wore Crinolines, The Maestro Wore Mohair, The Lyric Wore Lycra, and The Choir Director Wore Out. We do have all these in stock, some signed copies, and they are worth the read. Funny, well plotted, and if you like music, you'll love these and learn a lot. All are at $12.95 new.

"The Peculiar Crimes Unit". Doesn't that conjure up deep mysteries and intrigue? Christopher Fowler has written a series of books about this unit which is located in London. Bryant and May are pretty much the last detectives working in the unit and they are rapidly aging out. I decided to start at the beginning with Full Dark House ($17.00). I found it strange that the book opens with a bang - the PCU is blown up by a bomb, killing Bryant. But wait - you ask - how can there be a series if the character is dead? May knows he has to find out who killed Bryant, and the trail leads back to the London Blitz and their first case together. A dancer in the new "Orpheus" is found without her feet - odd in itself, but more bodies turn up in the theatre district and, in a London that's still scarred by war, everyone is terrified. The overall tone of the book is dark - there is some humor but even that is dark. The timeline switches from the '40s to the present day, and we see how the odd couple (think Scully and Mulder) grew up together and honed their talents from rookies to grumpy old detectives. There's a touch of paranormal, but not as much as the Peculiar Crimes Unit seemed to evoke. Instead, it's more of a police procedural - a "how-to" of tracking down criminals and bringing them to justice. In order, the books are: Full Dark House, The Water Room, Seventy-Seven Clocks, Ten Second Staircase, White Corridor, The Victoria Vanishes, Bryant & May on the Loose, Bryant & May off the Rails, The Memory of Blood, Bryant & May and the Invisible Code, Bryant & May and the Bleeding Heart, Bryant & May and the Burning Man, Bryant & May: London's Glory, Bryant & May: Strange Tide, Wild Chamber, Hall of Mirrors, and The Lonely Hour, most of which we have in various new/used selections from $15 to $28.

Minnesota has been my adopted state for years - I tried leaving it once and got sucked back into it, largely because of the quality of life and the rich culture - museums, theaters, authors, gaming... Monkeewrench ($8.99) by the mother/daughter duo P. J. Tracy covers two of those areas. Monkeewrench is a gaming company that has released a Beta version of Serial Killer Detective game where the players are given access to all the details and forensic evidence of twenty murders, the first two of which have been committed in real life. Meanwhile, in Calumet, WI an older couple is executed in church. Is there a relationship between the two events? And if so, what? Grace McBride and the rest of the Monkeewrench gang have to decide if they need to ‘fess up to the police about the similarities or ignore the clues and watch 18 more people die. The problem is that going to the police will out them as having created new identities ten years ago, for reasons they would rather not share with others. The authors are tricky - just when you think you’ve figured out who the culprit is, you find that you’re way off base. I loved the characters - they are real humans - not a chiseled jaw in sight. There’s humor, sometimes dark, sometimes laugh-out-loud, and it kept me on my toes formulating and then discarding theories and waiting for the dead couple to match up with the serial murders. One caveat is that it starts slow as each character (and there are many) gets introduced and placed into the story, but stick with it and it starts to flow. The book came to a satisfactory conclusion and I’m off to read the next in the series. They are: Live Bait, Dead Run, Snow Blind, Shoot To Thrill, Off the Grid, The Sixth Idea, Nothing Stays Buried, The Guilty Dead, Ice Cold Heart.
